

CONTENTS

ix	Acknowledgments	While one to write, I never expected to end up writing three other books, and I have fun with the unexpected arrivals. I extend my thanks to all those who have helped me, especially my family and friends in Australia. I have been very fortunate to be in a writing group with wonderful readers of the entire text, as well as real buddies. Sarah Franklin has helped me to think about tables, fences, and other points, and I am grateful for her contributions of thought. My appreciation goes to the other members of the group who have come out with me in London, Leizidou, Catarina, and Marion Fricker. Thanks also to my diversity project teams at Goldsmiths, and Kliec, Shona Hooper, and Lewis Turner. It has been great to be involved in an empirical project while writing this book because it has added to my work. I took up a new position at Goldsmiths College during the time I wrote this volume, and I would like to thank my new colleagues for their support. I am grateful to all those who provided such a friendly and engaging space in which to work. Finally, thanks to all those who attended seminars I gave at Leeds Metropolitan University, Stony Brook University, University College Dublin, London Metropolitan University, Durham University, Five Colleges Women's Studies Research Centre, Essex University, Goldsmiths College, and King's College for giving me feedback on different parts of this project. I am especially grateful to all of those who supplied me with stories, anecdotes, and references about tables.
1	Introduction: Find Your Way
25	Chapter 1: Orientations Toward Objects
65	Chapter 2: Sexual Orientation
109	Chapter 3: The Orient and Other Others
157	Conclusion: Disorientation and Queer Objects
181	Notes
203	References
217	Index	