

Contents

List of contributors	vii
Acknowledgements	ix

Introduction – From the Maker Movement to the 3D printing era: opportunities and challenges	1
Dinusha Mendis, Mark Lemley and Matthew Rimmer

1. IP in a world without scarcity	30
Mark Lemley

PART I UNITED KINGDOM

2. ‘Back to the future’? From engravings to 3D printing – implications for UK copyright law	56
Dinusha Mendis
3. Design rights and 3D printing in the UK: balancing innovation and creativity in a (dis)harmonised and fragmented legal framework	77
Thomas Margoni
4. Digital trade mark infringement and 3D printing implications: what does the future hold?	99
Dukki Hong and Simon Bradshaw
5. 3D printing and patent law – a UK perspective: apt and ready?	115
Marc D. Mimler
6. Transformative technologies and responsive legal scholarship	137
Roger Brownsword

PART II UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

7. 3D printing and US copyright law: implications for software, enforcement and business strategies	159
Peter S. Menell and Ryan Vacca

8. Integrating a classic tool for a modern challenge: US design patents implications for 3D printing Elizabeth Ferrill, Robert MacKichan, Christopher McKinley and Kelly Horn	185
9. How 3D printing disrupts trade dress protection and resurrects the need for source and quality assurance Deven Desai	203
10. Remedies for digital patent infringement: a perspective from the USA Timothy Holbrook	217
11. How democratized production challenges society's ability to regulate Deven Desai	234
PART III AUSTRALIA
12. Makers Empire: Australian copyright law, 3D printing and the 'Ideas Boom' Matthew Rimmer	253
13. 'Substantial similarity' under Australian design law: application to 3D printing Tyrone Berger	294
14. Trade mark controversies in 3D printing: an Australian perspective Amanda Scardamaglia	308
15. The reform challenge: Australian patent law and the emergence of 3D printing Jane Nielsen and Dianne Nicol	325
16. Don't believe the hype? Recent 3D printing developments for law and society Angela Daly	347
Conclusion – The future of printcrime: intellectual property, innovation law, and 3D printing Dinusha Mendis, Mark Lemley and Matthew Rimmer	361
Index	395