

Contents

Introduction 9

Part One

The Emergence and Institutionalization of Modern Science 17

- 1 Joseph Needham (1956)
Mathematics and Science in China and the West 21
- 2 J. Ben-David and A. Zloczower (1962)
The Growth of Institutionalized Science in Germany 45

Part Two

Structural and Cultural Features of Contemporary Pure Science 61

- 3 Robert K. Merton (1942)
The Institutional Imperatives of Science 65
- 4 Thomas S. Kuhn (1963)
Scientific Paradigms 80
- 5 W. O. Hagstrom (1965)
Gift-Giving as an Organizing Principle in Science 105
- 6 W. O. Hagstrom (1965)
The Differentiation of Disciplines 121
- 7 Michael Mulkay (1969)
Cultural Growth in Science 126

Part Six
Scientific Concepts and the Nature of Society 307

- 17 R. G. A. Dolby (1971)
The Sociology of Knowledge in Natural Science 309
- 18 Thorstein Veblen (1906)
Idle Curiosity in Society 321
- 19 Herbert Marcuse (1964)
Technological Rationality and the Logic of Domination 331
- 20 Jürgen Habermas (1968)
Science and Technology as Ideology 353

Further Reading 377

Acknowledgements 381

Author Index 383

Subject Index 391

Part Three

Science in Application:

Links with Technology and Economy 143

- 8 Ignacy Malecki and Eugeniusz Olszewski (1965)
Regularities in the Development of Contemporary Science 147
- 9 Derek J. de S. Price (1969)
Science and Technology: Distinctions and Interrelationships 166
- 10 J. Ben-David (1968)
Scientific Entrepreneurship and the Utilization of Research 181
- 11 N. D. Ellis (1969)
The Occupation of Science 188

Part Four

Science and Political Institutions 207

- 12 Yaron Ezrahi (1971)
The Political Resources of Science 211
- 13 Paul Gary Werskey (1971)
British Scientists and 'Outsider' Politics 1931-1945 231

Part Five

Science in Society:

Problems of Intelligibility and Impact 251

- 14 Oscar Handlin (1965)
Ambivalence in the Popular Response to Science 253
- 15 S. B. Barnes (1970)
On the Reception of Scientific Beliefs 269
- 16 Charles E. Rosenberg (1966)
Scientific Theories and Social Thought 292