Contents

Introduction and subject matter of this work are indicated by	VII
I. The current state of research and available source materials	1
II. The system and organization of the Nazi concentration camps	20
III. The basic concept of resistance in the concentration camps and its forms	46
IV. Initial forms of resistance: mutual aid, solidarity. The struggle for trusty posts	55
V. Camp hospitals and their contribution to organized resistance	79
VI. Political activities in the camps	95
VII. The battle against the informers	137
VIII. Liaison betwen the camps and the outside world	151
IX. Escapes	179
X. Sabotage	241
XI. Armed resistance in the camps	258
XII. Aspects of cultural life in the concentration camps	277
XIII. Religious life in the concentration camps	348
XIV. A summing-up of the achievements of organized resistance in the concentration camps	366
List of illustrations	379
Source materials and bibliography	382
Index of persons	410
concentrated introduction to the general problems associated with	these

Research undertaken so far has predominantly been concerned with the study of genocide and martyrdom, and also with the investigation of the organization and operation of the camp system. Life inside the camps, and in particular the resistance of the prisoners to the Naziroghne has been analysed to a much lesser degree. What has been produced so far are largely popular accounts dealing with one camp or one type of activity, in which not all available sources have been