David Cheetham is Reader in Philosophical Theology at the University of Birmingham. His interests include contemporary philosophical theology, theology and aesthetics. He is the author of numerous articles in journals such as The Heythrop Journal, New Blackfriars, Religious Studies, Sophia, Islam and Christian-Muslim Relations. His books include Ways of Meeting and the Theology of Religions (2013), (with M. Cartledge) Intercultural Theology (2011) and John Hick (2003). In his spare time he plays jazz piano in a jazz quartet.

Jeffrey W. Cupchik is an ethnomusicologist focusing on anthropological approaches to Buddhist ritual music research as well as popular musical culture and religion. He has also researched popular music historiography, exploring George Harrison's creative adaptation of South Asian classical music sonorities into 'raga rock'. His book The Sound of Vultures' Wings: The Tibetan Buddhist Ritual Chöd Practice of the Female Buddha Machik Labdrön (2017) reveals the integral role of music in the Chöd (severance) practice. He is currently Faculty Instructor in Anthropology with the Carlson-Aurilio Global Engagement Program: Buddhist Studies in India.

Michael Drewett is an associate professor in Sociology at Rhodes University, South Africa. He is co-editor (with Martin Cloonan) of Popular Music Censorship in Africa (Ashgate 2006) and (with Sarah Hill and Kimi Kärki) Peter Gabriel: From Genesis to Growing Up (Ashgate 2010) and is currently working on a book concerning popular music censorship in South Africa. He produced the documentary film Stopping the Music (2002) about an instance of South African
