

Contents

Abstrakt	5
Abstract	6
Abstraktum	7
Preface	9
Acknowledgements	10
1. Introduction: basic theoretical frameworks	11
1.1 Factors that influence decision-making in PPGs	12
1.2 System level institutions	12
1.3 System level characteristics	14
1.4 Organisational features of political parties	15
2. Institutional context of party unity	17
2.1 The political system in the Czech Republic and the position of the Parliament in it	17
2.2 The electoral system and its reforms	18
2.3 The nature of the mandate	20
2.4 The role of PPGs in the legislative process	22
2.5 Rules of voting	23
2.6 PPGs: general definition and possible classifications	24
2.7 PPGs in the Czech Republic: legal provisions and practice	25
3. Parliamentary party groups at the intersection	29
3.1 The relationship between the PPG and its members	31
3.2 The relationship between the PPG and the party in the government	37
3.3 The relationship between the PPG and the party on the ground	40
3.4 The relationship between the PPG and the party in the central office	43
3.5 How do Czech political parties influence their PPGs?	47
4. How and why are Czech PPGs unitary?	48
4.1 Semantics used to think about the unity of PPGs	48
4.2 Unity and participation in voting in the Chamber of Deputies between 1998 and 2002	51
5. Conclusion: Why is there less unity among Czech PPGs?	52
Appendix 1 – Data about the MPs and senators of the Parliament of the Czech Republic	55
Appendix 2 – Characterisation of the methods used for measuring unity and the analysed roll-call votes	59
Bibliography	63
Abbreviations	65
Shrnutí	67
Summary	68
Zusammenfassung	69

Lukáš Linek – chapters 1, 3, 4, 5, appendix 2

Petra Rakušanová – chapter 2, analysis of surveys among MPs

Adéla Seidlová – appendix 1