

Contents

Acknowledgements	17
Introduction	18
1. Opening scene	18
2. Democratic indeterminacy	20
2.1 Democratic ideals and persistent disappointment	23
3. Democratic indeterminacy, disenchantment and unpolitics	25
3.1 Types of indeterminacy	26
3.2 Socialist and liberal origins of unpolitical democracy	29
4. The citizen and the state	31
4.1 Equality or equity: Athens versus Rome	32
6. The Mlynář model of citizenship	34
7. Methodology	37
8. Outline of this study	39
8.1 Foundations and baselines for analyses	41
8.2 Comparison of common models across time	42
8.3 Evaluation of transition to liberal democracy	43
Chapter 1. Theory: Conceptions of Citizenship within Socialist and Liberal Democratic States	45
Introduction	45
1.1 Defining a democratic state	47
1.2 Contested visions of democracy	49
1.3 Comparing socialist and liberal democratic visions	51
1.4 Conceptualising citizenship in empirical models	52
1.5 Empirical models of citizen duty	53
1.6 A working definition of citizenship	55
IP1: Cognitive engagement model (information)	57
IP2: General incentives model (motivation)	58
SP1: Civic voluntarism model (time, money and civic skills)	60
SP2: Equity fairness model (a sense of what is just and fair)	62

SP3: Social capital model (social interaction)	64
1.7 Complementary and rival models of citizen action	68
Conclusion	70
PART 1. POLITICAL ATTITUDES AND ASPIRATIONS UNDER SOCIALIST DEMOCRACY	73
Chapter 2. Political Attitudes under Socialist Democracy in Czechoslovakia in 1968	74
Introduction	74
2.1 Analysis of the May 1968 survey by members of the Mlynář team	76
2.2 Quality of the May 1968 survey data	78
2.2.1 Subgroup profile of survey response effects	80
2.2.2 Modelling survey bias effects	83
2.2.3 Survey response bias modelled as random intercepts	85
2.2.4 Survey response bias modelled as heteroscedasticity	88
2.3 Citizen consensus and support for democracy	91
2.3.1 Public attitudes, level of consensus and climate of opinion	92
2.4 Structure of political attitudes in May 1968	93
2.4.1 Unidimensional preference scaling results	94
2.4.2 Exploratory factor analysis (EFA) results	95
2.4.3 Comparison of the political attitudes of Czechs and Slovaks	100
2.4.4 Structure of attitudes and survey response bias	103
Conclusion	105
Chapter 3. Structure of Democratic Attitudes and Popular Support for Pluralism under Socialist Democracy	107
Introduction	107
3.1 Structure of Czechoslovak citizens' attitudes	109
3.1.1 Structural Equation Modelling (SEM)	110
3.2 Modelling political attitudes using EFA and CFA	112
3.2.1 Structure of political attitudes in 1968: Czechs versus Slovaks	115
3.3 Modelling attitudes toward pluralism	117
3.3.1 Modelling citizen support for greater pluralism under socialism	119
3.3.2 Modelling results for citizens' attitudes toward pluralism	122
3.4. Attitudinal determinants of citizen duty under socialism	125
3.4.1 Attitudinal explanations of citizen activism	127
3.4.2 Differences between Czechs and Slovaks	128
Conclusion	135

Chapter 4. Opinion Preferences and Their Expression under Socialism: Evidence for Spiral of Silence Effects	137
Introduction	137
4.1 Spiral of silence, attitudes and their expression	139
4.1.1 Dynamic aspects of the spiral of silence theory	142
4.2 Expression of political attitudes and spiral of silence effects	145
4.2.1 Linking personal opinions with current and future majority positions	146
4.2.2 Operationalisation of current and future majority opinion	148
4.2.3 Endogeneity among the explanatory variables	149
4.2.4 Direct determinants of expressing an opinion	149
4.3 Data and modelling strategy	151
4.3.1 Modelling strategy: path analysis	155
4.4 Empirical results	157
4.4.1 Path analysis modelling results	159
Conclusion	164
Chapter 5. Were Czechoslovak Citizens Satisfied under Communism? Subjective Well-being under Socialist Democracy prior to the Prague Spring Reforms	167
Introduction	167
5.1 Subjective well-being, striving and regime support	169
5.2 What is SASS and what does it measure?	171
5.2.1 Is interpersonal comparison possible with SASS measures?	174
5.2.2 Substantive interpretation of SASS scores	174
5.3 Modelling individual aspirations under socialist democracy	175
5.3.1 Attitudinal orientation and striving	177
5.3.2 Information effects and individual aspirations	179
5.3.3 Efficacy and subjective well-being	180
5.3.4 Sense of dissatisfaction and unfairness and SASS scores	181
5.3.5 Social position and life satisfaction	182
5.4 Results of empirical analysis	184
5.4.1 Profile of the subjective well-being scales	185
5.4.2 Determinants of subjective well-being	187
5.4.3 Model fit and 'best' explanation of subjective well-being	191
5.4.4 Comparison of subjective well-being under socialist and liberal democracy	195
Conclusion	197

PART 2. MODELLING ATTITUDES TOWARD CITIZEN DUTY UNDER SOCIALIST AND LIBERAL DEMOCRACY	201
Chapter 6. Testing Rival Models of Citizen Duty under Socialist and Liberal Democracy, 1968–2008	202
Introduction	202
6.1 Competing models of citizen duty	204
IP 1: Cognitive engagement model (information)	205
IP 2: General incentives model (motivation)	208
SP 1: Civic voluntarism model (time, money and civic skills)	209
SP 2: Equity fairness model (a sense of what is just and fair)	211
SP 3: Social capital model (social interaction)	213
6.2 Results of model testing	216
IP 1: Cognitive engagement model (information)	217
IP 2: General incentives model (motivation)	220
SP 1: Civic voluntarism model (time, money and civic skills)	222
SP 2: Equity fairness model (a sense of what is just and fair)	224
SP 3: Social capital model (social interaction)	226
Conclusion	228
Chapter 7. Presence and Level of Enthusiasm for Candidacy under Socialist and Liberal Democracy, 1968–2008	230
Introduction	230
7.1 Conceptualising and modelling citizen activism	232
7.2 Modelling citizen activism	234
7.2.1 How should zeros be interpreted?	235
7.2.2 How should non-zero values be interpreted?	236
7.3 Continuous data: OLS with normal distribution, 1PM	236
7.4 Methodology: Tobit and Cragg Models	238
7.4.1 Cragg model: A 2PM Tobit model	239
7.4.2 Interpreting Cragg model results	239
7.5 Results of model testing	241
IP 1: Cognitive engagement model (information)	242
IP 2: General incentives model (motivation)	245
SP 1: Civic voluntarism model (time, money and civic skills)	247
SP 2: Equity fairness model (a sense of what is just and fair)	250
SP 3: Social capital model (interaction)	252
Conclusion	256

PART 3. ATTITUDES TOWARD DEMOCRACY AND THE FALL OF COMMUNISM	259
Chapter 8. Stability of Democratic Attitudes and Perceptions of the Fall of Communism	260
Introduction	260
8.1 Political values across two regimes, 1968–2008	262
8.1.1 Exploratory Factor Analysis (EFA)	263
8.2 Stability of perceptions of democracy, 1990–2001	266
8.3 Contemporary citizens' perceptions of the Velvet Revolution	269
8.3.1 Unprompted considerations of the Velvet Revolution	270
8.3.2 Classification of open-ended responses	271
8.4 Individual level analyses of attitudes toward the Velvet Revolution	274
8.4.1 Model of popular attitudes toward 1989	276
8.4.2 Historical and social context of popular attitudes toward 1989	279
8.4.3 Models of attitudes toward the Velvet Revolution	281
Conclusion	285
Conclusion
Closing scene	288
1. Consolidating and extending the evidence	291
1.1 Evolution of political attitudes, 1968–2008	293
1.2 Values and political culture	294
1.3 Political orientation and knowledge prior to the Velvet Revolution	295
2. Types of democracy and liberty	299
2.1 Three visions of liberty	300
3. Sources of contemporary disenchantment with democracy	303
3.1 Growth in inequality and the undermining of democracy	305
3.2 Liberal democracy as a strategy of stability	307
3.3 Contrasting legacies of 1968 and 1989	308
3.4 Failure of liberal socialism and civic participatory democracy	310
4. Liberal and socialist democratic political cultures in Czechoslovakia	313
4.1 Turning communists into democrats?	313
Final comments	315
Bibliography	318
Abstract	354
Appendices	355
Index	459