
Contents

List of figures	ix
List of tables	xi
Acknowledgements	xii
Foreword	xiii
Preface	xv
1 Putting pedagogical action research into the university context: what are the pressures?	1
2 Why be a reflective practitioner?	21
3 Why engage with the scholarship of teaching and learning?	36
4 What is the case for pedagogical action research?	50
5 Where do you start a pedagogical action research study?	69
6 What are the most suitable research methodologies?	87
7 How can you analyse qualitative data in pedagogical action research?	115
8 How can you analyse quantitative data in pedagogical action research?	131
9 How can you develop and adapt pedagogical research tools?	155
10 What are the ethical issues involved in pedagogical action research?	179
11 Going public: How can you grow the influence of your findings?	194

Appendix A	Some suggested methods of reflecting on practice	220
Appendix B	An example of a research protocol taken from the Write Now CETL research programme	223
Appendix C	Case study showing how qualitative and quantitative data can be combined	228
Appendix D	Exploring ways of measuring conceptions of learning	230
Appendix E	An example of a completed participant information sheet	232
Appendix F	Consent form template	235
Appendix G	Case study of a pedagogical action research study to illustrate some ethical issues	236
Appendix H	Ethics submission template	239
Appendix I	Example of an unsuccessful abstract that was submitted to a conference as a research paper	241
Appendix J	Example of a successful abstract that was submitted to a conference as a research paper	243
Appendix K	Example of a letter to the editor of a journal accompanying a rewritten manuscript	244
Appendix L	Example of a response to reviewers' comments	246
Appendix M	Example of a budget for an internally funded research bid	248
Bibliography		250
Index		261