Table of contents

Acknowledgments 9

1. Introduction to Egyptian Imperialism, Amarna Diplomacy, and Globalization in the Late Bronze Age: Research Questions, Theories, and Approaches 11

Egyptian Imperialism and the Amarna Letters: Outstanding Problems 14
Kumidi and Qatna: "Glocalization" in the Study of Egyptian Imperialism and Diplomacy 21
Towards a "History of Egypt" 23
Egyptology, Globalization, and Global History 24
Imperialism: a Working Definition 37
Globalization: Definitions, History, and the Late Bronze Age as Early Globalization 40
Note on the Use of Primary Sources 47

2. The Trauma of Globalization: the Hyksos, Pre-Emptive Warfare, and the Origin of Egyptian Imperialism in the Levant 49

The Hyksos in the Egyptian Record 49
The Beginning of Egyptian Territorial Expansionism: Amenhotep I, Tuthmosis I, and Tuthmosis II 58
Fear and Pre-Emptive Warfare: Polybius, the Punic Wars, and Further Political Remarks 64
The Hyksos: the Trauma and Misunderstanding of Globalization 69
Fear of Globalization, Pre-Emptive Warfare, and the Failure of Imperialism 82

3. Imperial and Diplomatic Policies of the 18th Dynasty in the Levant, from Tuthmosis III to the Amarna Period 85

Tuthmosis III and the Apex of Egypt's Territorial Expansion (Part I): the Annals 85
Tuthmosis III and the Apex of Egypt's Territorial Expansion (Part II): Other Royal Inscriptions 100
Tuthmosis III and the Apex of Egypt's Territorial Expansion (Part III): Private Inscriptions 115
Amenhotep II: Continuity and Change in the Egyptian Imperial Policies 125
Tuthmosis IV: the End of Territorial Imperialism? 149
Amenhotep III and the Late 18th Dynasty 154
The Topographical Lists of the 18th Dynasty: Diachronic Overview and Selected Toponyms 162
Economics of Egyptian Imperialism in the Levant 170
The Status Quaestionis on Egyptian Imperialism in the Northern Levant 179

4. Qatna: a Global City at the Crossroads of Networks in Syria 187

Qatna: the Archaeological Evidence 187
Qatna in the Amarna Letters 195
Cuneiform Texts from Qatna: the Inventories 201
Cuneiform Texts from Qatna: the Archive of King Idadda 205

5. The Failure of Egyptian Imperialism in Syria in the Amarna Period 217

Diplomatic Relations between Egypt and Mittani in the Late 18th Dynasty and the End of Pharaonic Territorial Expansionism in Syria 217
Ugarit 219
Qadesh: a Center of Anti-Egyptian, Anti-Imperialist Resistance in the Late Bronze Age 224
Niya and Qatna 234
Tunip and Nuḫašše 238
Amurru: the Only Place where Egyptologists Admit the Limits of Egyptian Imperialism 244
"Hedging": Contradiction as a Political Strategy 248

The Collapse of the Egyptian Sphere of Influence Along the Northern Levantine Coast: Ṣumur, Ullaza, and (even!) Byblos 249
Further Evidence for the Absence of Egyptian Authority in Syria in the Amarna letters 259
Egyptian Exceptionalism in the Study of the Amarna Letters 263

6. The Limits of Egyptian Imperialism in the Levant: the Damascus-Kumidi-Byblos Line 265

Damascus 267
Kumidi (Kāmid el-Lōz): a Center of Egyptian Influence in the Beqaa Valley 272
The Cuneiform Texts from Kāmid el-Lōz 281
Historical Analysis of the Kumidi Texts from an Egyptological Perspective 290

7. Global Cities and Networks: Alternative Territorialities of Egyptian Imperialism in Syria 295

Territory, Borders, and the "Territorial Trap": De-Territorializing Egyptian Imperialism 295
Global Cities, City Networks, and City Diplomacy 317
Territoriality Still Matters 336
Further Implications for Imperialism and Globalization 338

8. Globalization, Diplomacy, and the Limits of Imperialism 347

Imperialism and Globalization: an Uneasy Relationship 347
The Limits of Imperialism 350
Diplomacy Between Imperialism and Globalization 356
Language and Knowledge in Imperialism and Diplomacy 359
Thucydides' Melian Dialogue: the Resistance to Imperialism 371
Diplomacy and the Limits of Imperialism: Comparanda from Ancient Rome 376

Conclusions 383
Map 402
Abbreviations 403
Bibliography 405
Index 453
Czech language summary 459