

Contents

Acknowledgments

ix

1. The Oyster and the Experience Machine: Two Puzzles in Value Theory	1
1. Aristotle, the oyster, and the experience machine	1
2. Plato, Aristotle, and the value of virtue	6
3. Rational egoism rejected	11
4. Well-being and the quality of life	14
5. Inferior responses to McTaggart	18
6. Incommensurable superiority	20
7. The richness of human experience	24
8. Sidgwick and the definition of pleasure	28
9. Mill and the quality of pleasure	32
10. Why grow up?	35
11. The lives of plants and the value of pleasure	36
12. The truth in hedonism: experientialism	41
2. Well-Being and Ethical Virtue	43
1. Well-being and lists	43
2. Methodology, philosophy, and flourishing	47
3. Lists, good-making, and the nature of well-being	53
4. Experientialism	58
5. Hell and experience	62
6. Experience as a dependent good	64
7. The good in being a good human being	66
8. Being virtuous for the wrong reason: Kantian concerns	71
9. Do bad people have bad lives?	76
10. Is pleasure always good?	77
3. Experientialism and the Experience Machine	79
Part One	79
1. Strong and weak experientialism	79
2. Trade-offs	83
3. Moore and the experience machine	89
4. Music in the experience machine	90
5. Altruistic uses of the experience machine	92
6. The illusion of climbing a mountain	93
7. Self-deception and social illusions	95
8. The rest of one's life	97
9. Food, chess, and tennis	100
Part Two	106
10. Objections to the experience machine	106
11. Free choice	109
12. Contact with a deeper reality	111

13. Fictional worlds	113
14. Crisp's revised version	116
15. Rescued from death	121
16. Intellectual intuition and the ascent to beauty	122
17. Zombies	125
Part Three	126
18. Well-being and the satisfaction of desire	127
19. Nagel on the betrayal of friends	132
20. Feeling loved and being loved	137
21. Opus posthumous	139
22. Aristotle on posthumous benefits and harms	142
23. Aristotle on honor	144
24. Aristotle's god and the sense of control	145
4. Well-Being and Time	148
Part One	148
1. Do goods lose their goodness over time?	148
2. Does well-being have a diminishing marginal value?	151
3. Hurka on the well-rounded life	158
4. McTaggart, love, and Parfit's "Century of Ecstasy"	161
5. Life's ups and downs	170
6. Nagel's brain-damaged man	173
7. Temkin on exceptionally bad years	175
8. Equal temporal weight	180
9. Slote on discounting	182
10. Steady decline and an oyster-like existence	186
Part Two	188
11. Velleman on narrative significance	188
12. Velleman and Solon	195
13. McMahan on narrative unity and death	197
14. Can death harm a cow?	201
15. Goethe and antiquity: "Only the present is our happiness"	204
16. The art of valuing the present	207
17. "A sufficient period of time"	210
18. McTaggart's thesis defended	214
19. The reality of human suffering	217
20. Aristotle on a complete life	220
21. Death revisited	226
22. Long-term plans and the persistence of individuals	227
23. McMahan on an infant's death	231
5. Variations on Aristotelian Themes	235
Bibliography	239
Index	247