

Acknowledgments ix

One

Introduction: Ergodic Literature 1

The Book and the Labyrinth 1 / Some Examples of Ergodic Literature 9 / The Aim of This Study 13 /
What Is Cybertext? 17

Two

Paradigms and Perspectives 24

Problems in Computer Semiotics 24 / Textuality, Nonlinearity, and Interactivity 41 / Cyborg Aesthetics and the "Work in Movement" 51

Three

Textonomy: A Typology of Textual Communication 58

Previous Efforts 59 / Method 60 /
The Typology 62 / The Texts 65 / Analysis and Results 67 / Conclusions 73

Four

No Sense of an Ending: Hypertext Aesthetics 76

Paradigms of Hypertext 82 / The Sense of a Novel:
Michael Joyce's Afternoon 86 / The Rhetoric of Hyperliterature: Aporia and Epiphany 90 /
The Poetics of Conflict: Ergodics versus Narration 92 /
Transclusions 95

Five

Intrigue and Discourse in the Adventure Game 97

A Brief History of the Genre 97 / A Schematic Model of Internal Structure 103 / Some Issues in Adventure Game
Criticism 106 / Intrigue, Intrigant, Intriguee 111 / The Autistic Detective Agency: Marc Blank's Deadline 115 /
Intrigue and Discourse 124 / The End of Story? 127

Six

The Cyborg Author: Problems of Automated Poetics 129

The Case of Racter 132 / A Typology of Authors in the Machine-Human Continuum 134 / Laurel's Playwright: Seducing the User 136 / From Author Simulacrum to Cybertext 141

Seven

Songs from the MUD: Multiuser Discourse 142

Literature in the MUD? 142 / A Historical Perspective on MUDs and Nonlocal Communication 149 / The Aesthetics of Nonlocal Discourse 152 / Netiquette and Discourse 158

Eight

Ruling the Reader: The Politics of "Interaction" 162

The Death (and Politics) of the Reader 162 / Democracy in Cybermedia 167 / Levels of Usership 173

Nine

Conclusions: The Ideology of Influence 178

Anamorphosis versus Metamorphosis 178 / Toward Theories of Ergodic Literature 182

References 185 / Index 197