

Contents

Acknowledgments	vii
Notes on Frequent Citations	xi
Preface	xiii
1 Introduction—Preparing to “Be” Phenomenological	1
Heidegger’s “Preliminary” Question	2
Destructively Retrieving Husserl	4
Destructively Retrieving Dilthey	7
Retrieving Dilthey for Our Sake	12
PART ONE	21
2 From Dilthey to Heidegger: Recasting the Erklären-Verstehen Debate	23
Two Kinds of Science? What Is at Stake	24
Dilthey’s Experience-Based Defense of Verstehen	27
Dilthey on the Standpoint of Life	31
Husserl’s Phenomenological Replacement of Dilthey’s Standpoint	36
3 Heidegger’s Destructive Retrieval of Dilthey’s “Standpoint of Life”	49
On Phenomenology: Dilthey before Husserl	50
Appropriating Diltheyan “Intuitions”	57
Appropriating What Is Formally Indicated	62
Where and How Appropriation Ends	69

PART TWO	85
4 From Dilthey to Husserl	87
"Genuine" Phenomenology	88
"Ambiguity" in Husserl's Writings	89
Husserl's "Theoretical" Defense of Phenomenology	91
Husserl's Opposition to Naturalism and Historicism	96
Phenomenology's Special Version of Philosophy's "Problem of Method"	99
5 Heidegger's Diltheyian Retrieval of Husserl's Two Sides	111
The "Rigor" of Genuine Phenomenology	111
Turn toward Rigor or Return to Life	115
Bracketing versus "Rejoining" Lifeworld Experience	119
Natorp's "Subjectification" of Erlebnis	122
Reading Natorp through Dilthey	126
From Dilthey to Achieving Phenomenology's "Basic Attitude"	129
Sustaining Phenomenology's Basic Attitude	133
6 Conclusion—Continuously "Becoming" Phenomenological	147
Giving Dilthey His Due	149
Becoming Phenomenological, Never Being Phenomenological	153
Phenomenology, Not Just Phenomenological Scholarship	157
References	165
Index	177