

Miles, Mathilde Sørensen and Sari Pietikäinen. Our writing coach K. Anne Amicone has followed this project from the beginning, when I first realized I could spend project funding on a coach to make sure I do the writing I really want to do.

In Oak Park several people generously shared their thoughts with me and gave me feedback on my analysis of the Flock Safety camera debates. I would particularly like to thank Scott Sakiyama, Kathleen Finn Bell and Alicia Chastain for generously reading and commenting on a draft of the chapter about Oak Park. Thank you also to Emily Bembeneck and Sendhil Mullainathan at the Center for Applied AI at the University of Chicago for inviting me to be a visiting scholar at the center and for their support while I was there.

This book is an outcome of research funded by the European

Acknowledgements

vi

Introduction

1

1 Seeing More: Histories of Augmenting Human Vision

25

2 Seeing Differently: Exploring Non-human Vision

60

3 Seeing Everything: Surveillance and the Desire for Objectivity and Security

83

4 Being Seen: The Algorithmic Gaze

116

5 Seeing Less: The Blind Spots of Machine Vision

143

Conclusion: Hope

157

Notes

162

References

189

Index

211