

Contents

Preface	vii
List of Abbreviations	x
Introduction	1
1 (Anti-)corruption (not only) in the Czech way: on the road to populism?	7
Defining corruption: a problem?	8
Constructivist approaches to (anti-)corruption	11
The formation of the concept of corruption in the Czech environment: development, ideological frameworks, and the rise of populism	14
Perceptions of corruption, distrust and electoral success of new actors	27
(Anti-)corruption and “new” political parties	28
Conclusion	33
2 Populism and anti-corruption	41
What is populism?	42
Rise of populism in Czech politics	45
“Corrupt elite” as the core of the populist message	50
Conclusion	58
3 “Mainstreamisation of populists” and “mainstream inclination to populist principles”? The subject of corruption in the election manifestos of Czech political parties	64
Populism and mainstream: a research overview	65
Input data, methodological procedure and operationalisation of the order of populist communication	67

vi Contents

Analysis and interpretation of results 70

Conclusion 74

4 Populism, anti-corruption and the Czech Pirate Party 77

Pirate politics, populism and anti-corruption 79

Data and methodology 80

Is the anti-corruption rhetoric of the Czech Pirates populist? 82

Conclusion 85

Concluding remarks 88

Bibliography 93

Index 113