

Contents

List of tables	ix
Preface to the English translation	x
Preface to the first Chinese edition	xvi
Foreword by Paul Gewirtz	xxi
1 The second ideological emancipation or a Utopia?	1
2 On the innovation and transplantation of institutions and its self-organization	10
3 The considerations and a mistake of critics	20
4 Organism and liberty: the paradox of Hayek's rule of law (a discussion with Prof. Deng Zhenglai about spontaneous order)	26
5 The wisdom and prejudice of Carl Schmitt's constitutional theory	35
6 On two analytical frameworks provided for the debate of jurisprudence	47
7 Definite uncertainties and the grand design of the legal system in China	52
8 The judicial reform in China: the status quo and future directions	64
9 To implement the rule of law through "the system of three kinds of review"	90

10	Legal mode of social transformation	104
11	Tradition and innovation of legal order	112
12	Conditions for modern rule of law	120
13	The roots of law and its efficacy	129
14	Institutional combinations between “sollen” and “actuality”	135
15	Efficiency-seeking jurisprudence	141
16	The quantitative analysis and prediction of changes in law	148
17	The rule of private law and economic development	157
18	Reflections on relational contract theory	164
19	The status and role of parties in action inside and outside of court	173
20	Law and society geared to the 21st century: reflections on the 31st session of the symposium of the research committee on the sociology of law of the international sociological association	182
	Epilogue to the enlarged Chinese edition	198
	Index	201