

Contents

Introduction	xi
1 What is Jurisprudence?	1
1.1 The variety of jurisprudential issues	1.2 Some basic questions
1.3 Some points of method	1.4 Jurisprudence and its substantive context
1.5 What is the value of jurisprudence?
2 Classical Positivism: Bentham and Austin	11
2.1 Bentham's concept of jurisprudence	2.2 The command theory of law
2.2.1 The command	2.2.2 The sovereign
2.2.3 The attachment of sanctions	2.2.4 The Benthamite complete law
2.3 The viability of command theory	2.4 The question of public international law
2.5 Bentham's censorial jurisprudence	2.6 Further reading
3 Modified Positivism: H. L. A. Hart	32
3.1 Hart's gunman and the critique of command theory	3.2 The importance of rules
3.2.1 Obligation and the internal aspect of rules	3.2.2 The union of primary and secondary rules
3.2.3 The basis of the rule of recognition	3.2.4 Legal systems and the importance of officials
3.3 Hart's argument on rule scepticism	3.4 Public international law in Hart's theory
3.5 Hart and moral analyses of positive law	3.5.1 Abuse of law: the debate between Hart and Fuller
3.5.2 The enforcement of morality: Hart and Devlin	3.5.3 Hart's minimum content of natural law
3.6 The significance of Hart's theory	3.7 Further reading

4 Classical Naturalism

59

- 4.1 The central concerns of naturalist theories 4.2 The strands of classical naturalism 4.3 Classical Greek naturalism: Plato and Aristotle
 4.3.1 Platonic idealism and legalism 4.3.2 Plato and the obligation to obey
 4.3.3 The teleological analysis of Aristotle 4.4 The Judaeo-Christian impact: Augustine and Aquinas 4.4.1 Christian Platonism: St Augustine of Hippo 4.4.2 Christian Aristotelianism: St Thomas Aquinas
 4.5 Transition to an age of reason? 4.5.1 Hobbes: a social-contractarian response to anarchy 4.5.2 Locke: social-contractarianism and bad government 4.5.3 Rousseau: a contract with society not government 4.6 The problem of objectivity 4.7 The standing of classical naturalism
 4.8 Further reading

5 The Naturalist Revival

86

- 5.1 Lon L. Fuller and procedural natural law 5.1.1 Moralities of aspiration and of duty 5.1.2 The criteria of lawmaking
 5.1.3 Procedural morality and the substance of laws 5.1.4 Is procedural naturalism actually naturalist? 5.2 John Finnis and the theory of natural rights
 5.2.1 Finnis's defence of naturalism 5.2.2 The basic goods
 5.2.3 The tests of practical reasonableness 5.2.4 From natural law to natural rights 5.2.5 The obligation to obey in Finnis's theory
 5.2.6 The importance of Finnis's theory 5.3 Beyleveld and Brownsword: the moral nature of law 5.3.1 Law as a moral phenomenon
 5.3.2 Obligation in a moral view of law 5.3.3 The place of Beyleveld and Brownsword in modern naturalism 5.4 The continuing role of naturalist jurisprudence 5.5 Further reading

6 Islamic Jurisprudence

106

- 6.1 The structure and sources of Islamic Law 6.1.1 Sunnah
 6.1.2 Ijma 6.1.3 Qiyas 6.1.4 Ijtihad 6.2 The four Schools
 6.3 Islam and the State 6.3.1 Shari'ah and secular law in Islamic States
 6.3.2 Shari'ah and human rights 6.3.3 Shari'ah and the rights of non-Muslims
 6.4 Shari'ah and international law 6.4.1 Dar ul-Islam and Dar al-Harb 6.4.2 Jihad 6.5 Further reading

7 Marxism and Post-Marxism

120

- 7.1 Classical Marxist theory 7.1.1 Law in classical Marxist theory
 7.1.2 The transition from theory to practice 7.2 The development of Soviet legal theory
 7.2.1 Law in Imperial Russia 7.2.2 The Soviet ordering of things 7.2.3 E. B. Pashukanis and early Marxism-Leninism

7.2.4 A. Ia. Vyshinsky and socialist legality 7.3 The development of Chinese legal theory 7.3.1 Law in the Imperial and Nationalist Chinese traditions 7.3.2 Law in the People's Republic of China 7.4 Developments in Western Marxist jurisprudence 7.4.1 Karl Renner and the contrast between form and function 7.5 The significance of Marxist legal analyses 7.6 Further reading

8 Pure Theory

144

8.1 In what sense a 'pure' theory? 8.1.1 Pure theory and the Kantian theory of knowledge 8.1.2 The meaning of 'purity' 8.2 The hierarchy of norms 8.2.1 The structure of norms 8.2.2 Validation in the hierarchy of norms 8.2.3 The Grundnorm 8.2.4 The problem of revolutionary transition 8.3 Concretisation and the substance of norms 8.3.1 The working of concretisation 8.3.2 The reality of concretisation 8.4 The official emphasis of Kelsenian analysis 8.5 The role of public international law in pure theory 8.5.1 Monism, dualism and the Grundnorm 8.5.2 The Grundnorm of public international law 8.6 The value of pure theory 8.7 Further reading

9 Dworkin and the Rights Thesis

157

9.1 Dworkin's criticism of positivism and pragmatism 9.1.1 Positivism 9.1.2 Pragmatism 9.2 The rights thesis 9.2.1 Objections to judicial decision-making on policy grounds 9.2.2 Entrenched rights 9.2.3 The consequentialist theory of rights 9.3 Judicial decisions and the common law 9.3.1 The 'one right answer' thesis 9.3.2 Integrity in practice 9.4 Judicial decisions and statutes 9.4.1 Settled and hard cases 9.4.2 Integrity in practice 9.5 The chess analogy 9.6 Democracy 9.6.1 The judge as protector of rights 9.6.2 The principle of equal concern and respect 9.7 Law and morality 9.7.1 Community morality 9.7.2 Morality and obligation 9.8 Further reading

10 Scandinavian Realism

178

10.1 Early psychological theorists: Petrażycki and Hägerström 10.1.1 Petrażycki and the theory of impulses 10.1.2 Axel Hägerström: law and word magic 10.2 Vilhelm Lundstedt and the method of social welfare 10.2.1 The concept of social welfare 10.2.2 The importance of ideas of justice 10.2.3 The significance of Lundstedt's theory 10.3 Karl Olivecrona: independent imperatives 10.3.1 Olivecrona and legislative efficacy 10.3.2 Ideatum and imperantum: the binding quality of law 10.3.3 The problem of revolutions 10.3.4 Performatory imperatives and rights 10.3.5 The value of Olivecrona's analysis 10.4 Alf Ross and the judicial function 10.4.1 Validity and the chess analogy 10.4.2 Norms of conduct and of competence 10.4.3 Validity and the official viewpoint 10.4.4 Ross in the Scandinavian realist context 10.5 The message of Scandinavian realism 10.6 Further reading

11 American Realism

202

11.1 Major realist writers 11.1.1 Oliver Wendell Holmes 11.1.2 John Chipman Gray 11.1.3 Karl Llewellyn 11.1.4 Jerome Frank
 11.2 Major themes of American realism 11.2.1 Fact scepticism
 11.2.2 Rule scepticism 11.2.3 The prediction of decisions
 11.2.4 Judicial reasoning 11.3 The impact of realism
 11.3.1 Jurimetrics 11.3.2 Judicial behaviouralism 11.4 Further reading

12 Critical Legal Studies

224

12.1 The critique of the liberal legal tradition 12.1.1 An attack on formalism 12.1.2 Critique of legal reasoning 12.1.3 Contradictions in the law 12.1.4 Deconstruction: trashing, delegitimation and dereification 12.1.5 The constitutive theory of law 12.2 A specific example of the critical approach 12.2.1 The critical approach to contract 12.3 Critical legal studies and feminist legal theory 12.4 The role of Roberto Unger 12.4.1 Contextuality 12.4.2 Empowered democracy 12.5 Further reading

13 Postmodern Legal Theory

250

13.1 A Critique of the Enlightenment 13.2 Lyotard and Foucault
 13.3 Identity and the 'other' 13.4 Postmodernism and fundamental values 13.5 Derrida and deconstruction 13.6 Deconstruction and justice 13.7 Deconstruction and the liberal constitution 13.7.1 Postmodern constitutional theory 13.8 Reconstruction 13.9 Conclusion 13.10 Further reading

14 The Economic Analysis of Law

275

14.1 The antecedents of the economic approach 14.1.1 Realism 14.1.2 Critical legal studies 14.1.3 Utilitarianism 14.2 Different conceptions within the school 14.2.1 The Coase theorem 14.2.2 Efficiency and equity 14.3 Posner's economic analysis

14.3.1 The economic approach and legislation 14.3.2 The economic approach and the common law 14.3.3 Contract law 14.3.4 Criminal law 14.4 Wealth as a value 14.5 An assessment of the Chicago school 14.6 Further reading

15 Justice Theory

297

15.1 Perspectives upon justice theory 15.2 John Rawls and a liberal distributive theory of justice 15.2.1 The original actors and the veil of ignorance 15.2.2 Distribution and the thin theory of good 15.2.3 The principles of justice 15.2.4 Generational equity and the just savings principle 15.2.5 Application of the principles of justice 15.3 Robert Nozick and just entitlements 15.3.1 The idea of the minimal State 15.3.2 Minimalism, tax and the free market 15.3.3 The concept of just entitlements 15.4 Justice, individuals and society 15.5 Further reading

16 The Concept of Injustice

312

16.1 Law in the Third Reich 16.2 Post-1945 judicial consideration of Nazi law 16.3 Concepts of injustice in the post-war cases 16.4 Justice and injustice: the link 16.5 Further reading

Index

325