

CONTENTS

Preface	vii
Introduction	xi
1 Social recognition and criminalization of genocide	1
Effect of the Genocide Convention	3
Sociological recognition of genocide	4
2 Defining genocide as a sociological concept	8
Lemkin's conception and the UNGC definition	8
Some sociological definitions and issues	12
Intent and extent – recalling some frontiers	15
Intent re-examined	19
War and genocide	20
A sociological definition proposed	23
A paradigm for detecting and tracing genocide	25
Typologies of genocide and case-finding	30
3 Explanations of genocide	32
The sociological theory gap	32
Structural theories of genocide	35
Social-psychological theories	44
Earlier social-psychological findings:
we find the enemy is us	44
Fear of death as an instigator	46
The intertwined 'roots of evil'	47
The contribution of Norman Cohn	49
4 Contextual and comparative studies I: ideological genocides	51
The 'uniqueness question'	51
Misuses of genocide comparisons	55
Holocaust studies	57
Victims: the social organization of hell	60
The Judenrat question	63
Bystanders: helpers, rescuers and social defense	63

	Perpetrators: social theories and genocidal performances	66
	The Armenian genocide and some comparisons	69
	Soviet and Communist Genocides and 'Democide'	75
5	Contextual and comparative studies II: other genocides	79
	Ethnocide, genocide and mass death of indigenous peoples	79
	Genocide in North America	80
	Implications of definition for policies of development	82
	A post-1945 survey of genocide	83
	Retributive genocides and plural society theory	86
6	Punishment and prevention: implications for social policy and research	92
	The aftermath of genocide: consequences and memory	92
	Post-diction and anticipation	95
	Preventing genocide	97
	Models for monitoring genocidal processes	98
	A sociological research agenda	101
	Bibliography	104
	Index	117