

Contents

Table of Cases	xi
Table of Legislation	xix
INTRODUCTION 'PERSONAL' PROBLEMS: RETHINKING THE REASONABLE PERSON	1
I. The problem with the reasonable person	1
II. The scope of this analysis	3
III. Overview of the argument	5
IV. Conclusion	16
1. Living on the Fault Line: The Reasonable Person and the Developmentally Disabled	18
I. Tracing the 'fault line'	20
II. Defending the 'fault line'	26
III. Conclusion	54
2. 'Boys Will Be Boys': The Child Defendant and the Objective Standard	58
I. Judging the playing boy: McHale v Watson	59
II. The 'abnormal' child defendant: adult activities, bullies, and girls	83
III. Conclusion	90
3. Fun with Dick and Jane	92
I. Entrapment and temptations: making sense of allurements	95
II. Conclusion	128
4. Just the Facts: Common Sense Ideas of the Normal and the Reasonable Person	131
I. Reasonable men of ordinary prudence	131
II. Of mice and men: developmental disability and the normal	135
III. Normal men, natural women, and the fool's misfortune	144
IV. The rhetoric of common sense	157
V. Conclusion	163
5. Ordinary Prudence, Equality, and the Rule of Law	164
I. Difference or discrimination: assessing equality under law	165
II. Equality, fault, and responsibility: liability under the objective standard	173

III. Equality and the pitfalls of tradition	179
IV. Conclusion	195
6. Are Objective Standards Worth Saving? Exploring the Feminist Debate	198
I. The feminist critic and the reasonable man	198
II. Subjectivizing the reasonable person: feminist critiques of self-defence and provocation	202
III. The unreasonable man: equality and provocation	207
IV. Sexual assault and the reasonable person	220
V. Conclusion	230
7. Culpability and the Objective Standard: The Sexual Assault Debate	232
I. Objectivity and inadvertence: some threshold issues	233
II. When is inadvertence culpable?	240
III. The indifference account	257
IV. Conclusion	272
8. Moving towards a Solution: An Egalitarian Objective Standard	274
I. The sexual harassment debate: do we need the reasonable woman?	276
II. The problem of discretion	281
III. Reconstructing reasonableness	286
IV. Rethinking the person, not the reason	301
V. Conclusion	315
Bibliography	317
Index	333