
Contents

Acknowledgements	vii
Introduction – Law’s Trace	1
Deconstruction is here, now, in America	5
Between politics and philosophy	8
The strategic occupation of the Aufhebung	11
The call of deconstruction	14
Chapter breakdown	16
Fetishism and anxiety	20
1 Deconstruction and representation: tracing the sign	25
The French reception of Hegel	29
Kojève’s Hegel: the case of the missing body	31
Hyppolite’s Hegel: from the phenomenology to the logic	37
Derrida’s Hegel: from the pit to the pyramid and back again	41
2 Translating deconstruction: signing the trace	54
Walter Benjamin and the language of names	57
Suspended over the abyss: the task of the translator	63
Signing the trace	68
3 The messianic without messianism	75
Marx and justice	77
Aristotle and the “now”	79
Hegel’s version of time: from “now” ‘til eternity	81
An(other) time: of ghosts, messianism, and singularity	86

4	Mourning terminable and interminable: law and (commodity) fetishism	96
	The haunting of the (qualitative?) commodity	98
	"Breaks in gradualness, leaps!"	104
	The dialectic of Capital and the Science of Logic	105
	The haunting of the law	107
5	Justice and the impossibility of mourning: Antigone's singular act	112
	Glas and the family	115
	Hegel and Sophocles' Antigone	116
	The law of law	119
	Antigone's singular act	122
	"The law of law, always in mourning"	129
	Justice-law and a fantasy of sexual complementarity	131
6	Generalizing the economy of fetishism	138
	Freud's fetish	140
	Playing two scenes at once	143
	Feminism and deconstruction	145
	Conclusion	155
	End of metaphysics: "who is the friend?"	156
	Rogues, democracy, and autoimmunity	160
	References to the conclusion	165
	Index	167