

CONTENTS

Preface	xiii
Synopsis	xvii
1 Introduction	1
1.1 What this book is about: a brief outline	1
1.2 Global realism versus Critical philosophy	5
1.3 Kant	9
1.4 Vienna	13
1.5 The Normative view	18
1.6 Autonomy and the unity of reason	20
1.7 Will and feeling: practical reasons and value	23
1.8 Morality	28
1.9 Is the world our world? Are we in it?	29
PART I THE STRUCTURE OF NORMATIVE CONCEPTS	33
2 Reasons	35
2.1 Epistemic, practical, and evaluative reasons	35
2.2 Specific, overall, and sufficient	37
2.3 Epistemic fields: prima facie and 'all-things-considered reasons'	41
2.4 Epistemic fields in space and time	45
2.5 Reasons and indicators	47
2.6 'Should', 'ought', and 'right'	48
2.7 Can 'R' and 'R _o ' be defined in terms of 'S'?
Degrees of belief and feeling	50
2.8 Interpretative explanations	52
2.9 Epistemic, evaluative, and practical: an irreducible trichotomy	53
2.10 Facts, reasons, and supervenience	55
3 Indexicality, Universalizability, and the Range of Reasons	57
3.1 Reflexivity, acting from reasons, and self-determination	57

3.2	Indexicality: neutral and relative reasons	60
3.3	Reasons as nominal or substantial facts	61
3.4	Relativity to agent, patient, and thinker	63
3.5	Relativity to time and the general formula	67
3.6	The universality and the universalizability of reasons	68
3.7	The universalizability of evaluative reasons	70
3.8	What determines the range of a reason?	71
3.9	Cognitive internalism	73
4	Normativity	77
4.1	Semantic reduction and concept possession	78
4.2	Normative sentences and normative predicates	80
4.3	Defining 'good'	82
4.4	Objections to the definition	87
4.5	Thick evaluative terms: (i) wholly normative	93
4.6	Thick evaluative terms: (ii) mixed	96
4.7	Functional goodness and cost-effectiveness	98
4.8	Reasons and conditionals	99
4.9	The Transmission principle	103
4.10	Categorical and hypothetical	104
5	Warrant	107
5.1	Self-accessibility and warrant	107
5.2	Epistemic self-audit	109
5.3	Epistemic states	112
5.4	Having a reason	113
5.5	Acting from a warrant: (i) knowledge of one's epistemic state	114
5.6	Acting from a warrant: (ii) normative insight into complete reasons	115
5.7	Apperception and independent objects	119
5.8	Some theses about warrant	121
5.9	Warrant and justification	124
5.10	Reliability and knowledge	127
5.11	Rational commitment and rationality	130
5.12	Autonomy	133

PART II EPISTEMIC REASONS	135
6 The A Priori	137
6.1 Three models of apriority	138
6.2 Intuitionism	142
6.3 The Critical argument	144
6.4 Against intuitionism	146
6.5 A priori propositions	148
6.6 A priori warrants	150
6.7 The normativity of a priori propositions	152
6.8 Offshoots of normative propositions	155
6.9 Apriority and defeasibility	156
6.10 A priori knowledge	160
7 Analyticity	164
7.1 Kant, Mill, Frege, and Vienna	165
7.2 The empty-inference approach	167
7.3 Sentence, proposition, and truth condition	172
7.4 Are the basic principles of truth analytic?	174
7.5 Analyticity and implicit definition	176
7.6 Verificationism and its difficulties	178
7.7 Fixing a reference and apriority	181
7.8 Propositions and content	184
8 Modality	186
8.1 Logic	187
8.2 Acts of inquiry and epistemic reasons	189
8.3 The dynamics of supposition	191
8.4 Modality as unconditional exclusion and inclusion	192
8.5 Normative interpretation of modal logic	195
8.6 Modal knowledge and fallibilism	198
8.7 Modality and normativity: cart and horse	200
8.8 Factualism versus the normativity of logic	203
8.9 Empiricism and reasons	204

9	Non-monotonic Norms	207
9.1	Apperceptual and perceptual reasons	207
9.2	Evidence and reasons to believe	210
9.3	Inductive evidence	213
9.4	Defeasibility and monotonicity	214
9.5	Non-inductive, non-monotonic norms: norms of receptivity	217
9.6	Probability, frequency, and propensity	220
9.7	Do epistemic reasons satisfy the probability calculus?	223
9.8	Bayesianism	227
9.9	The dynamics of inquiry	230
 PART III EVALUATIVE AND PRACTICAL REASONS		 233
10	Rational Explanation: Belief, Feeling, and Will	235
10.1	Explaining belief, feeling, and action	236
10.2	Cognitive and non-cognitive models of motivation: psychological arguments	239
10.3	Cognitive and non-cognitive models of motivation: philosophical arguments	242
10.4	Instrumentalism	245
10.5	Against instrumentalism	247
10.6	Williams on internal reasons	248
10.7	The requirement of effectiveness	252
10.8	Cognitive internalism and the range of practical reasons	254
10.9	Reason, feeling, and autonomy	256
10.10	The will: Wille and Willkür	259
11	Reasons and Feelings: (i) The Bridge Principle and the Concept of a Person's Good	263
11.1	Sentimentalism: the Bridge principle	264
11.2	The concept of a person's good	267
11.3	Desire and reason to desire	270
11.4	The irreducibility of reasons to desire	272
11.5	Categorical and particular desires	274
11.6	How a person's good can expand	278
11.7	Personal good and rational care: acting for someone's sake	282

11.8	Egoism	285
11.9	Ideals and practical necessity	287
12	Reasons and Feelings: (ii) Moral Concepts	290
12.1	Wrongness and blameworthiness	291
12.2	Blame as withdrawal of recognition	294
12.3	Morality, blame, and practical reasons	295
12.4	Morality, self-determination, and autonomy	301
12.5	Cognitive internalism and autonomy	304
12.6	Rights and duties of right	307
12.7	Justice, desert, and fairness	313
12.8	The epistemology of blame	317
12.9	Moral wrongness: predicate, property, and concept	318
13	Impartiality: (i) The Principle of Good	321
13.1	The limits of sentimentalism	322
13.2	Impartiality and autonomy	324
13.3	Impartial good and the disinterested will	327
13.4	Practical reason and the will	330
13.5	Good and rights	333
13.6	Telic reasons	334
13.7	Utilitarianism	336
13.8	Utilitarianism and moral obligation	339
13.9	Rule utilitarianism	340
13.10	Other indirect options	344
14	Impartiality: (ii) The Demand Principle	347
14.1	Sidgwick's three methods of ethics	348
14.2	The Demand principle	351
14.3	Demand and the disinterested will	353
14.4	On the mutual relations of the sources of practical reasons	356
14.5	Can it be wrong to pursue the Good?	359
14.6	Hegel on conscience	361
14.7	Esotericism and abstraction	364
14.8	The principles of safety and conscience	366

15	Moral Judgement and Feeling	369
15.1	British sentimentalism and German idealism	370
15.2	Moral recognition	373
15.3	Blame and avoidability	376
15.4	Ethical punishment as atonement	378
15.5	Recognition and respect	382
15.6	Respect and honour	385
15.7	The elementary forms of the moral life	387
15.8	Liberal community: freedom and impartiality	390
15.9	Criticism of morality	392
 PART IV THE NORMATIVE VIEW		399
16	The Epistemology of Reason Relations	401
16.1	Facts	403
16.2	Spontaneity	405
16.3	Normative harmony and reflective equilibrium	410
16.4	Convergence	412
16.5	Receptivity versus self-evidence: intuitionism again	413
16.6	Receptivity and spontaneity in Kant	416
16.7	Free thought	418
 17	 The Ontology of Reason Relations	 420
17.1	Semantics versus metaphysics	421
17.2	Existence and actuality	424
17.3	The causal condition	426
17.4	Reason relations and abstraction	428
17.5	Truth and correspondence	430
17.6	Quietism is too quiet	434
17.7	Non-cognitivism is not required	436
17.8	What turns on 'realism'?	439
 18	 Rules, Norms, and Concepts	 442
18.1	Rules and norms	443
18.2	The normativity of rule-following	444

18.3	Moore's open question	447
18.4	Wittgenstein's open question	451
18.5	Norms and concepts	452
18.6	Cart and horse: supervenience	454
19	Self and Self-Determination	458
19.1	Apperception, consciousness, and 'inner sense'	458
19.2	What is it to grasp and act for a reason?	462
19.3	Self-determination and the unity of apperception	464
19.4	Self-determination, freedom, responsibility, and autonomy	465
19.5	Why treat reasons as nominal, not substantial, facts?	469
19.6	The ontology of persons	472
19.7	Empirical and intelligible	475
20	The Critique of Reasons	477
20.1	Reasons and Reason	478
20.2	In defence of the trichotomy	480
20.3	Constructivism and cognitive irrationalism in Kant	484
20.4	The Normative view as Critical philosophy	487
20.5	How do epistemic norms apply to reality?	489
20.6	Are epistemic norms defeasible?	492
20.7	Scepticism	494
20.8	Naturalism	499
20.9	Can Critical dualisms be overcome?	502
	Appendix: Symbols, Terms, and Theses	505
	References	511
	Index	519