

Detailed Contents

1. Introduction: The Modern Splendour of Customary International Law	1
2. The Enabling Constraint	14
1. The monolithic approach (1920–27)	17
2. The dualist approach (1927–86)	22
3. The dismembered approach (1986–2018)	27
4. The disguised monolithic approach (2018–present)	32
3. The Third Element	40
1. The requirement of norm-creativity	41
2. Reasons for forgetfulness	45
4. The Custom-making Moment	48
1. The custom-making moment in the international legal discourse	52
2. The custom-making moment and its doings	55
5. The Practicians	59
1. Being a practician	61
2. International organizations and non-State actors as practicians	66
3. First World's practicians	74
6. Self-destruction	88
1. A self-destructing discourse	90
2. Rejuvenating customary international law through self-destruction	96
7. Self-confirmation	105
1. Self-confirmation in modern discourses	105
2. Self-confirmation and the ascertainment of practice and opinio juris	107
8. System-support	111
1. Guaranteeing a minimum content	111
2. Hosting fundamental doctrines	113
3. Providing self-explanation and closure	119

9. The Residual Receptacle	122
1. Customary international law as a residual receptacle in international human rights law	123
2. Customary international law as a residual receptacle in international criminal law	129
3. Competition in reception: customary international law versus general principles of law	133
10. The Empire of Rules	138
1. The pull of ruleness	139
2. Ruleness denial	140
3. There is no way out of the rule	142
11. Concluding Remarks: The Splendid Textuality of Customary International Law	146
Bibliography	155
Index	183