

Contents

Preface	viii
A note on Mill's texts	xviii
1. Mill's radical background	I
1. Psychological egoism	3
2. Utilitarianism	8
3. Evaluative hedonism	10
4. Duty and interest	15
5. Why utilitarianism?	21
2. Varieties of motivation	26
6. Mill's apparent egoism	26
7. Mill's rejection of psychological egoism	30
8. Reservations about the Radical legacy	33
9. The sanctions of utilitarianism	34
10. The demands of utilitarianism	38
3. Perfectionism about happiness and higher pleasures	46
11. The higher pleasures doctrine	46
12. Subjective and objective pleasures	51
13. Problems for hedonism about higher pleasures	52
14. Attitudinal and hybrid hedonism	58
15. Perfectionism	60
16. Reconciling the elements of happiness	63
17. Perfectionism about happiness	67
18. Perfectionism and pluralism about happiness	72
19. Unanswered questions about perfection and happiness	73
4. Ambivalence about duty	79
20. Varieties of utilitarianism	80
21. Utilitarianism as a standard of conduct	82
22. The case for act utilitarianism	84
23. Felicific tendencies	85
24. Principles and rules	89
25. Sanction utilitarianism	98
26. An apparent virtue of sanction utilitarianism	103

27. The vices of sanction utilitarianism	106
28. The Art of Life	108
29. Considered, but not consistent, act utilitarianism	110
5. The justification of utilitarianism	113
30. Methodological naturalism	113
31. A traditional reading of the proof	118
32. Spot the howler	119
33. An alternative reading of the proof	121
34. Bottom-up justification	125
35. Utilitarianism's prospects	132
6. Liberal preliminaries	135
36. One very simple principle and the categorical approach	135
37. The self/other asymmetry	139
38. The scope of liberty	141
39. The harm principle and liberal rights	142
40. Categories, rights, and utility	146
7. Freedom of expression in a liberal context	149
41. The blanket prohibition on paternalism	150
42. Against censorship	152
43. The truth-tracking rationale	152
44. The deliberative rationale	154
45. From expressive liberties to liberal principles	156
46. Limits on liberty	158
47. Limits on freedom of expression	161
48. Deliberative values and First Amendment categories	162
49. From liberal principles to expressive liberties	165
50. Free speech and other liberal principles	171
8. Liberal principles refined	173
51. The harm principle	173
52. Is harm sufficient?	176
53. Is harm necessary?	180
54. Moralizing harm?	187
55. Paternalism	190
56. Offense	196
57. A balancing test	198
58. Legal moralism	203
59. The Devlin debate	206
60. Beyond the Devlin debate	208
61. The categorical approach revisited	212
9. Liberalism, utilitarianism, and rights	214
62. The apparent tension between utility and rights	215

63. The sanction theory of rights	217
64. Rights as secondary principles	223
65. Rights as pre-eminent goods	226
66. Reconciling utility and rights	232
 10. Liberal democracy	 234
67. The case for representative democracy	234
68. The scope of the franchise, weighted voting, and expertocracy	238
69. The trouble with weighted voting	244
70. Liberal democracy and the common good	249
71. Old and new liberalisms	253
72. Perfectionist liberalism	255
 11. Sexual equality	 260
73. The case for sexual equality	260
74. Rebutting the case for inequality	265
75. The vices of charity and self-abnegation	268
76. Is the sexual division of labor natural?	269
77. Transitional justice?	271
78. Millian feminism	276
 Epilogue	 277
79. Making utilitarianism more progressive	278
80. From progressive utilitarianism to liberalism	280
81. Equality as a progressive principle	282
82. Mill's legacy	287
 Bibliography	 290
Index	297