

Contents

Acknowledgments	ix
Introduction	xiii
1. THE STUDY OF CITIES
Diversity	1
Antiurbanism	3
The Bipolar Moralistic Model	5
Empirical Studies of Cities	8
Urban Anthropology	10
Conclusion	10
2. SCALES	17
Simultaneous Large and Small Scales	22
Observers' Biases	23
Observers' and Actors' Perceptions	23
Actors' Scales	25
	35

Scales and Sociocultural Change	39
Conclusion	40
3. MAGNITUDES	43
The Problem of Size	44
Megacities of the World	45
Some Themes of Megacity Impact	47
Megacities and World Population	51
Magnitudes and Internal Diversity	53
Three Cities	58
Conclusion	65
4. EVOLUTION	67
Origins	68
Primordial Cities	69
Vicissitudes	71
Phases of Urban Evolution	74
Third World: Latin America'	78
Third World: Sub-Saharan Africa	81
Third World: East and Southeast Asia	82
Third World: India	86
Third World: The Middle East	87
Western Industrial Cities	90
Revolutionary Industrial Cities	96
Megacities Revisited	107
5. LIVELIHOODS	115
Alienation	116
Marginality	121
Livelihoods in Urban Life	125
Occupational Communities	135
Conclusion	149
6. CONNECTIONS	151
Community and the Problem of Stasis	152
Disconnectedness	156
Minimal Connectedness	158
Connectedness	159
Neighborhoods	161
Networks	166
Conclusion	179
7. SUBCULTURES	182
The Subculture Concept	183
Universal Subcultures	184
Collective Life-Styles	208
Subcultures of Violence	210
Bureaucratic Subcultures and Problems of Scale	212

8. AGENDA FOR THE HUMANITY OF CITIES	218
Dissolving Boundaries	221
The Spirit of Accommodation	221
The Proximity of Heterogeneity	222
Cross-Cutting Subcultural Boundaries	223
Gatekeepers and Brokers	224
Bureaucratic Subcultures and the "Others"	225
Distemic Space Behavior	226
Grass Roots	236
Conclusion	243
Bibliography	252
Index	281

Acknowledgments

I began teaching a course on urban anthropology at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill in the early 1960s. I continued to teach it regularly for almost a quarter of a century, until my retirement in 1986. During that time, I learned a great deal about cities from many different sources, only some of which were anthropological. Apart from a rather small coterie of kindred urban spirits, anthropology has been only one of many sources of inspiration and insight, for the orientation of mainstream anthropology seems to be as nonurban now as it always has been.

However, in addition to those kindred spirits—who include Jack Rollwagen, Leonard Plotnicov, and Estelle Smith, I am happy to acknowledge my gratitude to a number of individuals who have given me different, but specific, kinds of assistance, and so made it possible for me to write this book.

James L. Peacock, III, Donald L. Brockington, and George R. Holcomb—as successive chairmen of the Department of Anthropology of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill—facilitated my endeavors in many ways.

I also wish to express my thanks and appreciation to Carolyn A. Merritt