

CONTENTS

PREFACE

1 Introduction

- 1.1 Questioning the welfare state
- 1.2 Definitions and objectives
- 1.3 Equity versus efficiency
- 1.4 Why the welfare state?

2 Poverty and inequality

- 2.1 Introduction
- 2.2 Comparing poverty
- 2.3 Comparing inequality
- 2.4 Redistributive effect of social protection
 - 2.4.1 Effect on the poverty of households
 - 2.4.2 Aggregate effect on poverty and inequality
 - 2.4.3 Permanent inequality and poverty across European countries
- 2.5 Conclusion

3 Social spending

- 3.1 Introduction
- 3.2 Level and profile
- 3.3 Evolution
- 3.4 Problems of comparison
- 3.5 The entitlement problem
- 3.6 Conclusion

4 Revenue sources

- 4.1 Introduction
- 4.2 Financing the welfare state
- 4.3 Alternative sources
 - 4.3.1 Regressive taxation
 - 4.3.2 Adverse effect on competition
 - 4.3.3 A shrinking tax base
- 4.4 Social insurance contributions
- 4.5 Conclusion

5 Types of social protection	38
5.1 Introduction	38
5.2 Taxonomy of social protection	38
5.3 Implications of alternative regimes	41
5.3.1 Redistribution	41
5.3.2 Incentives	42
5.3.3 Political support	43
5.4 Styles of welfare state	45
5.5 The active versus passive welfare state	47
5.6 Alternative approaches	48
5.7 Conclusion	49
6 Social insurance and globalization	50
6.1 Introduction	50
6.2 Benefits of globalization	51
6.3 Tax competition and race to the bottom	52
6.4 Some evidence	55
6.5 Why so little race to the bottom?	59
6.6 The open method of coordination	60
6.7 Another view	64
6.8 Conclusion	64
7 Welfare state and economic efficiency	67
7.1 Introduction	67
7.2 Individual behavior	68
7.3 A numerical example	70
7.4 Aggregate evidence	74
7.5 An historical view	76
7.6 Conclusion	77
8 Efficiency of the welfare state	78
8.1 Introduction	78
8.2 The Matthew effect	79
8.3 Administrative costs	81
8.4 Doing better with less	83
8.5 Survey of productive efficiency studies	84
8.6 Public spending efficiency	86
8.7 An aggregate view at efficiency	86
8.8 Conclusion	90

9 Social versus private insurance	91
9.1 Introduction	91
9.2 Social insurance	91
9.2.1 The state, the market and the family	91
9.2.2 The specificity of social insurance	92
9.2.3 Expenditure for insurance, private and public	93
9.3 Standard cases for social insurance	94
9.3.1 Market failures	94
9.3.2 Social insurance as a redistributive device	96
9.4 New arguments pro and con	97
9.4.1 Increasing demand and evolving labor market	97
9.4.2 Payroll taxation, fiscal competition and social dumping	98
9.4.3 Credibility and commitment	99
9.5 Implications and conclusion	99
9.6 Conclusion	101
10 Old age pensions	102
10.1 Introduction	102
10.2 Profile of the systems	102
10.3 Financing problem	105
10.4 Early retirement	107
10.5 Difficult reforms	109
10.6 Reforming social security	111
10.7 Conclusion	114
11 Health care	116
11.1 Introduction	116
11.2 Expenditure on health care	116
11.3 Cost containment	121
11.4 Equity aspects	122
11.5 Conclusion	124
12 Unemployment and poverty	125
12.1 Introduction	125
12.2 Unemployment and employment	125
12.3 Unemployment benefits	128
12.4 Two tracks	129
12.5 The working poor in Europe	133
12.6 Conclusion	136

13 Family allowances	137
13.1 Introduction	137
13.2 Evolution and structure	137
13.3 The two effects of family allowances	140
13.4 Types of child care policies	143
13.5 Conclusion	144
14 Conclusion	146
14.1 Lionel or Tony	146
14.2 The acquired rights issue	147
14.3 Towards a European social protection	148
14.4 Wrapping up	149
BIBLIOGRAPHY	151
GLOSSARY	159
INDEX	165