

Contents

Preface	ix
1 What the Issues Are	1
1. Recent Scholarship on Aristotle's Philosophy of Mind	4
2. The Case for a Single Theory	9
3. Aristotle and Modern Philosophy of Mind	15
4. Objectives and Strategy	19
Part I. The Perceptual Faculty
2 The Theoretical Framework	23
1. The Theoretical Foundations	25
2. Perception in General	38
3. The Psychophysical Model of Perception	39
4. Reductive Materialism: Ancient and Modern Versions	43
5. Hylomorphism and Psychophysicalism	49
3 The Five Senses and the Common Sense: Perception and Apperception	55
1. The Logos Doctrine	56
2. Koinē Aisthēsis	62
3. The Physiological Basis of the Common Sense	71
4. Theory and the Common Sense	76
5. Epistemological Issues	77
4 Phantasia	81
1. What Phantasia Is	82
2. Mnēmē , Anamnēsis and Dreaming	87
3. Phantasia and Voluntary Movement	95
4. Sensory Representation	99
5. Phantasia and the Foundational Principles	107

Part II. Thought and Consciousness

5	Thinking and Perceiving	113
1.	The Nature of the Noētikon	113
2.	The Noētikon and the Aisthētikon	117
3.	The Autonomy of Thought	124
4.	Mental Representation	127
5.	The Noetic Faculty and the Foundational Principles	130
6	Consciousness	133
1.	The Common Sense and the Unity of Experience	134
2.	Reflexive Consciousness	145
3.	Is Aristotle's Conception of Consciousness Different from Ours?	149
4.	Consciousness and the Foundational Principles	152

Part III. Perception, Thought and Knowledge

7	The Epistemological Consequences	157
1.	Perception as the Source of Knowledge	158
2.	The Genetic Account of the Posterior Analytics II, 19	161
3.	Psychologism and Realism	171
4.	The Epistemological Consequences of the Foundational Principles	176
5.	Psychological Solutions to Epistemological Problems	178
	Conclusion	180
	Abbreviations	182
	Notes	183
	References	227
	Index	239