Contents

Introduction x

Acknowledgments xii

About the Authors xiii

1 How Brands Grow 1

Byron Sharp and Jenni Romaniuk

How to grow 2

Can you engineer your brand loyalty? 2

The law of double jeopardy 4

How brands change in penetration and loyalty over time 8

Penetration rules! 9

Why does double jeopardy occur? 11

(Back to) How to grow 15

Dismantling barriers to market-share growth 16

Meaningful loyalty metrics 18

Conclusion 18

2 Target the (Whole) Market 21

Byron Sharp and Jenni Romaniuk

All that glitters … 22

The heavy-buyer fallacy 22

Why light/infrequent buyers really matter 25

Pareto says you can't ignore lighter buyers 28

What about heavy category buyers? 32
The natural monopoly law 33
Resist the seduction of sole loyalty 34
Sophisticated mass marketing 36
Don't shoot yourself in the foot with target marketing 37
Conclusion 39
3 Where New Customers Come From 40
Byron Sharp and Jenni Romaniuk
Competitive brands have similar customer bases 41
What about service categories in emerging markets? 43
Loyal switchers 45
Using predictable customer overlap 49
Durables—looking over time 53
Take the McDonald's challenge 53
Insights from partitions 56
Are local brands a separate sub-market? 58
Conclusion 59
4 Building Mental Availability 60
Jenni Romaniuk
The brand = our memories 61
We all have similar brains 61
Memory affects buying; buying affects memory 62
Our brain when thinking about brands and buying 63
Cued retrieval 66
Psst … a secret about big brands 70
Not one 'consideration set': many context-specific evoked sets 71
Category buying and CEP experiences 72
Mental availability measurement 74
Mental availability metrics 75
Why not use top-of-mind awareness? 78
Building and freshening brand memories 78
Brand positioning = your advertised messages 79
Love, hate and the wide chasm between them 81
Conclusion 83

5 Leveraging Distinctive Assets
Jenni Romaniuk
Meet our owl 86
What's in a (brand) name? 86
The (many) types of distinctive assets 87
Building an asset 87
Step 1: Selection—choose your brand's assets wisely 8
Benchmark metrics 9
Distinctiveness measurement in action 9
Step 2: Execute well 9
Setting the long-term strategy to create a distinctive asset palette 9
Distinctive assets and mental availability 10
Distinctive assets and physical availability 10
Conclusion 10
6 Achieving Reach 10
Jenni Romaniuk
Living in a fragmented media world 1
What does reach really mean? 1
Reach versus spend 1
But I can't plan for reach because … 1
Advertise where you sell 1
(More) valuable audience: Light and non-brand buyers 1
Choosing media platforms 1
Mixing a media cocktail 1
Conclusion 1
7 Word-of-Mouth Facts Worth Talking About 1
Jenni Romaniuk and Robert East
The lure of word of mouth 1
Should I focus more on encouraging positive or combating negative WOM? 1
WOM equals conversation (about brands)
Experience with the brand matters
Relax—your brand's level of WOM is probably normal

Positive WOM has the most influence when … 130
WOM as a reinforcer 136
Conclusion 137

8 Building Physical Availability: Presence 139
Magda Nenycz-Thiel, Jenni Romaniuk and Byron Sharp
Why being 'easy to buy' can be quite difficult 140
Why build presence? 142
Channelling choice 144
Achieving market coverage 145
Going beyond the cliché of the 'multi-channel world' 146
Using laws of (growth) shopping behaviour to prioritise channels and retailers 148
Shopping around 148
Loyalty to retailers follows a double jeopardy pattern 149
How retailers compete—applying the duplication of shopping law 152
E-commerce is a whole new ballgame? 154
Is e-commerce the loyalty builder? 155
And for retailers? 156
Conclusion 157

9 Building Physical Availability: Prominence and Portfolio 159
Magda Nenycz-Thiel and Jenni Romaniuk
Prominence: Is your brand easy to find in buyers' shopping environments? 160
Portfolio: Is your brand buyable? 163
Principle #1: Be buyable over buyers and over time 164
Principle #2: Benchmark your portfolio size for your market share 165
Principle #3: Identify and prioritise your core 167
Principle #4: Manage your long tail 168
Principle #5: Make only disciplined additions to the brand's portfolio 169
Conclusion 171

10 New Brands and New Buyers of Brands 173
Jenni Romaniuk and Byron Sharp
A special occasion: The birth of a new brand 174
The 'arduous' path to first purchase 175
New brands grow in the same way as existing brands 176
Who buys first? 177
What about loyalty? 179
A two-stage launch strategy 181
Priority mental structures for a new brand (buyer) 182
Conclusion 187

11 Getting Down to Business-to-Business Markets 189
Jenni Romaniuk
One B2B description to rule them all? 190
Why might laws of growth hold in B2B contexts? 190
Brand defection and acquisition patterns over time 197
Mental availability in a B2B context 198
Did you bring your brain to work? 203
But what about building up a positive attitude/combating rejection? 204
Physical availability 206
Building mental availability, physical availability or both? 208
Conclusion 209

12 And Finally, a Bit of Luxury 212
Byron Sharp and Jenni Romaniuk
Who buys luxury brands? 213
Does familiarity breed contempt? 213
If I own it, does it lose its sparkle? 217
Does being 'easily available' cheapen a luxury brand? 219
Does small mean niched? 220
Buyer profiles of luxury brands seldom differ 223
Conclusion 226

A Final Note 228

Reference list 229