

CONTENTS

List of figures	ix
About the author	xi
Preface	xiii
Acknowledgements	xvii
1 Your Master's thesis and you: Moving towards academic Zen	1 a Writing as a relationship between you and the reader	3
b Understanding yourself: What do you want from this?	4
c Understanding your audience: What do your readers expect?	5
d When a rose isn't a rose: Variations in the genre	7
e What a difference a place makes: Cultural and disciplinary differences	9
f Coming in from the outside: English as an additional language	10
g Organization of this book	12
PART I THE PROCESS	17
2 From topic to question to design: Planning your journey	19
a Choosing a topic	20
b From topic to question	21
c From question to design: Fitness for purpose	24
d Methodology, methods, and materials: What approach will best help me answer my question?	26
e Theory: Which ideas will I use to help me make sense of my material?	28
f Quality checks: The art of critical thinking	30
3 Ethics: Making good choices	35
a Ethics related to the research	36
b Ethics related to the informants	37
c Ethics related to the profession	41
d Ethics related to the writing	41
e Relating to guidelines and procedures	44
f Real (academic) life is messy and ambiguous	45
4 You are what you read: Building a foundation of knowledge	49
a Getting started	50
b How much reading is enough?	55

CONTENTS

c	Remembering and making sense of what you have read	56
d	Transitioning from reader to writer	58
5	Writing as thinking: From rough draft to final document	63
a	Writing as a lifestyle	64
b	Developing a routine	65
c	Intensifying your focus	66
d	Motivating yourself	68
e	Getting the flow going	69
f	Revising, and revising some more	70
g	Finding your voice	70
h	Writing in a second language	71
i	Life happens	73
j	Letting go	74
6	Supervision and guidance: Getting help along the way	77
a	What you should (and should not) expect from your supervisor	78
b	Juggling more than one supervisor	81
c	Keeping track of agreements	81
d	The elephant in the room: Power imbalances and poor supervision	82
e	Where else can you get help?	85
f	What to do with the help you get: Managing feedback	87
PART II	THE PRODUCT	91
7	Structure and argument: What's the logic of your story?	93
a	The heart of your story: Core argument	94
b	The logical flow of academic storytelling	97
c	Rules and conventions: Navigating expectations	103
8	Your introduction: How do you fit into the conversation?	107
a	Making assumptions about your reader	108
b	Providing background on the topic and setting	109
c	Summing up the academic conversation: Literature review	110
d	Who are you in this conversation?	114
e	Dealing with hostile audiences	117
f	Shifting from listener to speaker: Joining the conversation	118
9	Your theoretical and conceptual framework: What ideas are you using?	123
a	(Re-)writing about theory: A beginner's guide	124
b	What kinds of things might need explaining?	125
c	Modelling: Providing a big picture	131

CONTENTS

d	What about terms or ideas you coin yourself?	132
e	How do you deal with a theory chapter if your whole thesis is a theoretical work?	133
10	Your method: What did you do to answer your question?	137
a	Who are you in relation to your research? Objectivity and transparency	138
b	How generalizable do you expect your findings to be? Describing the setting	139
c	What kind of research is this? From big picture to detail	140
d	What counts as data, and how did you get it? Sources, methodological tools, and sampling	143
e	What did you do with your data once you got it?	146
f	How do we know that what you say is true? Anticipating critical thinking	147
11	Your results and analysis: What are you building your argument on?	151
a	What kind of argument are you trying to make?	152
b	Genre conventions of your methodological approach	154
c	Presenting quantitative data analysis	155
d	Presenting qualitative data analysis	157
e	Presenting a non-empirical (or theoretical) analysis	160
f	Presenting your data visually	161
12	Your discussion and conclusion: So, what does all this mean?	167
a	Summarizing your study	168
b	The purpose of a discussion	170
c	Implications for existing theory	175
d	Implications for practice or policy	176
e	Recommendations for future research	177
f	Concluding	177
13	The finishing touches: Polishing and submitting your work	181
a	Editing for clarity	183
b	Editing for language and grammar	185
c	Editing for style	187
d	Referencing	188
e	Formatting and handing it in	192
	Bibliography	195
	Index	199