

Contents

|                                               |         |
|-----------------------------------------------|---------|
| List of figures                        | page ix |
| Preface                                | xi      |
| Acknowledgments                        | xiv     |
| 1. The rhyme and the reason of neutralization | 1       |
| Part I: Rhyme                          | 13      |
| Section A: Observation and description |         |
| 2. Topology                                   | 15      |
| 3. Taxonomy                                   | 31      |
| 4. Typology                                   | 42      |
| Section B: False positives             |         |
| 5. Partial phonemic overlap                   | 53      |
| 6. Near-neutralization                        | 62      |
| Section C: Explanation                 |         |
| 7. Ease of production                         | 78      |
| 8. Ease of perception                         | 86      |
| 9. Phonetic misperception                     | 101     |
| 10. Semantic misperception: early proposals   | 110     |
| 11. Semantic misperception: recent proposals  | 119     |
| Section D: Exemplification             |         |
| 12. Case study                                | 130     |
| 13. Domains of application                    | 140     |
| 14. "Distinctions are drawn that matter"      | 149     |

|                                |            |
|--------------------------------|------------|
| Part II: Reason         | 159 |
| 15. Cement                     | 161        |
| 16. Boundary signals           | 165        |
| 17. Prosodies                  | 174        |
| 18. Transitional probabilities | 188        |
| 19. The power of Babelese      | 194        |
| Glossary                   | 200    |
| References                     | 204        |
| Language index                 | 218        |
| Subject index                  | 220        |