

CONTENTS

Preface11
Alexander Vladychenko

Foreword13
Gilda Farrell and Federico Oliveri

Part I – Developing social cohesion in a multicultural Europe.....23

I – Connecting migration and integration policies:
how can we construct concerted policies
in a multicultural Europe?23
Conversation with Rita Süssmuth, former Speaker of the German Parliament

1. Taking fears seriously – developing political answers to the changes23

2. Making migration work for our “global neighbourhood”26

3. Developing social policies and participation as tools for “integration”29

II – Why should the rights of migrants matter for Europe?33
*Conversation with Thomas Hammarberg,
Commissioner for Human Rights, Council of Europe*

1. Implementing the laws – Recognising the rights of migrants33

2. Humanising the migration policies35

3. Raising new collective awareness of migrants’ rights37

Part II – Migration and diversities: exploring the coherence of conceptual and political frameworks41

I – Situating migration in the context of global transformations:
what kind of European governance do we need?41
Conversation with Saskia Sassen

1. New policy frameworks – but for what reason?41

2. Migration as the problem – but from which perspective?	47
3. Political arguments for change – but who will take the responsibility?	56
Bibliography	60
II – What makes migrant workers “different”? A study of the mismatch between rules and realities in the fight against discrimination	61
Federico Oliveri
1. How real is “integration”? What is “diversity”?	61
2. Non-discrimination: defining, measuring and analysing the mismatch between rules and realities	63
3. Fighting discrimination through the law: degrees of “legal safeguards”	69
4. Migrants’ right to have rights	70
Conclusions	76
Bibliography	79
III – Invisible poverty: migrants, new social policies and the risk of exclusion	83
Giovanna Procacci
Introduction	83
1. From fighting inequality to fighting discrimination	84
2. New policies against social exclusion	86
3. Europe and its migrants	89
4. Excluding the most excluded	94
Conclusions	95
Bibliography	97
Part III – Migrants’ access to social rights: towards a policy of “cultural competences”	101

I – Citizenship, equality and social rights in a pluralist society	101
Alessandra Facchi
1. Multiple citizenship and cultural pluralism	101
2. Social rights, diversities and legal equality	104
3. Social policies as a tool for individual autonomy	107
Bibliography	111
II – Cultural competences in improving migrants' access to health services	113
Tiziana Caponio
Introduction	113
1. Assessing immigrants' needs and demands for health care – an open problem	114
2. Cultural competence and access to health services – an overview of practices and policies in Europe	116
3. Practices of cultural mediation in Belgium and Italy – an in-depth analysis of local cases	122
Conclusions	128
Bibliography	130
III – The challenge of cultural competence in the Nordic welfare state: experiences and perspectives from Finland	133
Kris Clarke
Introduction	133
1. The problem of multicultural identities	133
2. The Finnish context of cultural diversity	135
3. The current status of migrants in Finnish social and health policy-making	143
4. Notions of "cultural competence"	145
5. Challenging scientific research on migrant communities: test subjects or developing partnerships?	146

Conclusions	147
Bibliography	149
IV – Young people of immigrant origin in Europe: how can we make the school an instrument for social mobility and acquisition of intercultural competences?	155
Altay A. Manço
Introduction	155
1. Initial schooling for new immigrants and learning of the teaching language	155
2. Discovering intercultural competences	161
Bibliography	166
Part IV – Space for participation and negotiated solutions to conflicts	167
I – Making citizenship a means of sharing responsibility: the naturalisation campaign and integration policy in Berlin	167
Conversation with Günter Piening and Andreas Germershausen, Commission of the Berlin Senate for Integration and Migration
1. The “ Passt mir! ” naturalisation campaign in Berlin	167
2. Citizenship as a key factor of the “integration” process	169
3. Real citizenship at stake: major social challenges and policy innovation	171
4. Organisation of migrants and dialogue with public authorities	176
II – The political participation of migrants in Europe	179
Muhammad Anwar
Introduction	179
1. Debates on political participation	179
2. Voting rights for migrants in European states	180
3. Ethnic minorities in British politics	183
4. The role of ethnic minority organisations and political parties	187

Conclusions	188
-------------------	-----

Bibliography.....	191
-------------------	-----

III – How can the right to stand for election improve social cohesion in a multicultural Europe?	193
Conversation with Emine Bozkurt, Member of the European Parliament

1. Migrants in political life – closing the gap of democratic representation	193
--	-----

2. Cultural diversities and political participation – challenging some misunderstandings	196
--	-----

3. Active participation as a way for sharing responsibility	199
---	-----