

Contents

Abbreviations	xi
Introduction	1
§1. The elusive phenomenon of the activity of questioning	1
1 The phenomenon of questioning	21
§2. The role of questioning in phenomenology	21
§3. Husserl's path from phenomenological questions to phenomenological answers	26
§4. Heidegger's return to and preservation of Husserl's phenomenological questioning	33
§5. Patočka's undaunted phenomenology of the question 'what is history?'	44
§6. The unique type of questioning employed by phenomenology	50
2 Husserl's 'To the questions themselves'	57
§7. Chapter introduction	57
§8. Husserl's motto precedes his methods	59
§9. The experiential, philosophical and historical flux of phenomenology	65
§10. What is the phenomenon for Husserl?	70
§11. Phenomena understood as pregnant objects and logical predicates	74
§12. The multiplicity of singular unities: A phenomenon and its manifold	78
§13. Phenomenology as systematic but not merely a system	86
§14. Chapter conclusion: Phenomenological questions precede their answers	95
3 Heidegger's 'possibility' of phenomenology	97
§15. Chapter introduction	97
§16. Heidegger moves away from Husserl	98
§17. Heidegger on the structures of an explicitly formulated question	107

§18. Heidegger's BT as an introduction to phenomenology as possibility	113
§19. What does phenomenology mean for Heidegger?	117
§20. The four terms of phenomenon , semblance , appearance and mere appearance	119
§21. The concepts of logos and aletheia within the activity of phenomenology	126
§22. Chapter conclusion: The uncovered power of question preservation	135
4 Patočka's questioning phenomenology	137
§23. Chapter introduction	137
§24. The centrality of questioning in Husserl & Heidegger's phenomenology	139
§25. Provisional, religious and philosophical definitions of heresy	141
§26. Patočka's heretical approach to phenomenology	143
§27. Patočka's encounter with Husserl's questioning of the lifeworld	147
§28. What is phenomenology for Patočka?	151
§29. Patočka's heretical phenomenology as using Heidegger to further Husserl	160
§30. Patočka's philosophy of history as an example of his phenomenology	163
§31. Patočka's phenomenology as shaken but undaunted philosophy	166
§32. Chapter conclusion: the method of Patočka's heretical phenomenology	170
5 The logos of questioning	175
§33. Chapter introduction	175
§34. Philosophy as a call to genuine questioning	176
§35. Regular questioning correlates with an experience of curiosity	184
§36. Philosophical questioning correlates with an experience of wonder (thaumasein)	186
§37. The stability and instability of questioning	189
§38. The flux of wonder and curiosity	192
§39. Chapter conclusion: Thinking in a mode of possibility	196
Conclusion	199
Notes	214
Works Cited	242
Index	249