

Contents

6	Foreword	349	Historical city center renewal overshadowed
8	INTRODUCTION	363	End of construction of the Reich autobahn
23	A CALL FOR A GOOD DICTATOR A letter from Ernst and Ilse May (1933)	367	Building for the armaments industry
27	ATTACK In search of National Socialist urban planning (1933–1937)	383	War infrastructure: the West Wall (Siegfried Line)
32	Old and new players in urban planning	386	Concentration camps, prisoner of war camps, and forced labor camps
39	Spaces for mass mobilization	399	German expansion in Europe
52	Embryonic forms of triumphal urban planning	407	Start of colonization in the East
71	Megaproject: the Reich autobahn	429	Propaganda: new tasks, new media, new urban design
91	Hydraulic engineering: dams, hydroelectric power plants, and canals	438	Grand plans above all else
98	Small housing estates instead of big cities	443	VIOLENT EXPANSION Planning and Construction in the East (exhibition, 1941)
112	Internal colonization: autarchy and food freedom	451	TERROR Urban planning during the war (1941–1945)
127	The beginning of systematic renewal of historical centers	465	A new order in Europe
150	Schools, hostels, Ordensburgen	469	Organization Todt: construction of war infrastructure
164	Labor, youth, and detention camps	476	Colonization of the East
178	Thingstätten – the theatricalization of the landscape	494	Camps for prisoners of war, forced labor, and extermination
180	Military buildings for the army and navy	515	Housing construction during the war
193	Aviation and air armament buildings	526	Protecting the armaments industry
213	Urban planning for the industrial sector: Beauty of Labor	536	Linz: final grand plans stuck on paper
219	Strength through Joy. The seaside resort of Rügen: leisure town on the Baltic Sea	543	Preparing for reconstruction
225	Urban planning as propaganda	552	Urban planning during the war.
234	Housing exhibitions	557	URBAN PLANNING AFTER THE "COLLAPSE" Reactions from experts in the immediate postwar period
244	In search of National Socialist urban planning	571	TWELVE LONG YEARS Urban planning – an essential instrument of the Nazi dictatorship
249	INTERNATIONAL COMPETITION The International Exposition in Paris (1937)	589	OUTLOOK Remembering: but what and how?
259	TRIUMPH Grand plans above all else (1937–1941)	596	Bibliography and list of archives
268	Grand plans	618	Index of persons and places
282	Berlin: "the General Development Plan for the Reich Capital"	622	Authors
317	Planning of university cities
325	Fragmentary construction of new towns and cities
341	Departure from small housing estates		