

Table of contents

Introduction: A guide for the perplexed 1

- What are we up to? 1
- To whom are we talking? 3
- So what's the bottom line? 6
- An invitation 11
- Acknowledgments 11

PART I: THE STRUCTURAL DYNAMICS OF BECOMING AWARE

Chapter 1. The basic cycle

1.1 Overall presentation 15

- Entering into the inquiry* 15
- A working description: Three temporal horizons* 20
- Why a session?* 20
- Exemplary variations* 21

1.2 Epoche 24

- The three components of epoche* 24
- The suspension and its follow-ups* 26
- Redirection and letting-go* 31
- The difficulties of redirection* 34
- Pragmatic difficulties and help in overcoming them* 35
- Letting-go and the quality of attention* 37
- The basic structure of becoming aware: The double fold of reflection and affection* 41

1.3 Intuitive evidence 43

- Intuition as gesture and as process* 43
- The philosophical roots of intuition* 44
- The temporal dynamic of the intuitive act* 48
- The fragile lightning-bolt of the process of intuitive fulfillment:
From emptiness to givenness-in-flesh-and-blood* 49
- Intuition and affectivity* 54

Primordial intuition and imaginary eidetic variations 55
The three-part structure of insight 58
The mode of evidence as inserted in a background 61
Criteria of appreciation and of completion 62

Chapter 2. The structure of a session

2.1 Expression 65
Expression is an optional and multiform component 65
Expressions and linguistic descriptions 66
When should a description be produced? 67
The specific quality of suspension proper to descriptive verbalization 68
The quality of the intuitive evidence proper to verbalization 70
Modalities of linguistic expression from the perspective of a research program 73
A sketch of the problems with descriptive categorization 76

2.2 Validation 77
What expression and validation have in common 77
Validation is an optional and multifarious component 78
Structures of mediation: First-, second- and third-person positions 80
Stages in the process of validation 85

Chapter 3. Surrounding events

3.1 Upstream and downstream 97
3.2 Apprenticeship and training 99
3.3 Facets of apprenticeship 101
3.4 Progressive generativity of expertise 102
3.5 Relation to mediation 103
3.6 The temporal generativity of motivation and after-effects 107

PART II: THE MOTIVATIONS FOR THE STUDY OF EXPERIENCING

Chapter 4. The point of view of the researcher

4.1 The cognitives sciences 115
(F. J. Varela)
The recent consciousness boom 115
A three-way sketch 118
Irreducibility: The basic ground 119

---

Case studies	122
The notion of phenomenological data	125
Mutual enlightenment	127
4.2 Psychology and subjective experience: Introspection	129
(P. Vermersch)
A historical perspective on psychology and subjectivity	129
The initial evidence and the first critiques	130
The first improvements: Experimental introspection	136
Strategies of circumvention	145
Data relative to the first person point of view have not had any impact	148
Improvements on the way	151
Conclusion	153
Chapter 5. Concerning practice
(N. Depraz, F. J. Varela, P. Vermersch)
5.1 Introduction: Practice is the privileged site for grasping of experience	155
5.2 Embodied practices in cognitive science	155
5.3 A diverse philosophical background: Practical reason, pragmatism, praxis and habitus	159
5.4 The “handle” of cognition: The psychological view of knowing-how and coping with	163
5.5 Practitioners validate and enrich this level of analysis	167
Chapter 6. The philosophical challenge
(N. Depraz)
6.1 The place of experience in philosophy	170
The situation of Phenomenology with regard to the history of philosophy	171
Access to experience as a return to the “things themselves”	174
Phenomenological experience is neither empirical nor constructed: It is eidetic	177
The transcendental character of experience: Phenomenology as “transcendental empiricism”	182
6.2 The ways of the reduction	184
The ethos of the reduction	184
Ways in which the reduction is prepared	186

Multiple access to the reductive attitude: The problematic of the ways	192
The ethos of the reductive subject	197
Aids to the reduction	199
Bearing and limits of phenomenological philosophy	201
Chapter 7. Wisdom traditions and the ways of reduction (F. J. Varela and N. Depraz)
7.1 What do we mean by spiritual traditions?	205
7.2 The practice of mindfulness (shamatha): The historical context	207
The grounding	207
The consolidation	210
The Mahayanist turn	210
Tibet and the Vajrayanist turn	213
7.3 Sitting practice and the phenomenology of experience	214
The point of practice no.1: The shamatha method	215
Point of practice no.2: Vispashyana	220
Point of practice no.3: Tonglen and empathy	221
Point of practice no.4: Natural spontaneity as second spontaneity	223
7.4 Relating back to other motivations	224
Practice of shamatha sitting meditation and introspective psychology	224
Meditative practice of the three yantras and the phenomenological ways of the reduction	225
Where are we?	231
Open conclusion	233
Postface	237
References	241
Glossary of terms	253
Index	263