Introduction:

“Married over sixty years!...What’s your secret? You’ve got to have secrets. This just doesn’t happen.” 1

The First Discovery:

Healthy doses of shared fun and pleasure are crucial and critical ingredients of a long and happy marriage. 5

The Second Discovery:

Learn to accept and value the differences between you and your spouse and capitalize on these differences to strengthen your relationship. 16

The Third Discovery:

While some conflicts are inevitable in every marital relationship, what is important for a happy, lasting marriage is the ways couples deal with their conflicts. . . . 32

The Fourth Discovery:

The simple thoughtfulness and consideration embodied in the common, down-to-earth interactions of everyday married life are crucially important. These are the manners of a marriage that make life easier, more comfortable, and happier for both husband and wife. 67

The Fifth Discovery:

Holding grudges only leads to marital unhappiness, so learn to forgive your spouse for the human transgressions of everyday life, and whenever possible, also forget. . . 74

The Sixth Discovery:

Every marriage exists within a network of other people, including children, in-laws, and friends. Thus, the happiness of a marriage depends not only on how husband and wife relate to each other, but also on how they, as a couple, relate to other people. 78

The Seventh Discovery:

Happy couples never reach a point at which the door to open and trusting communication is closed, and, as a result of this communication, they build an intimate relationship with each other in more ways than just sex. 88
