

Contents

| | |
|---|------|
| List of figures | x |
| Acknowledgments | xiii |
| Introduction | 1 |
| The human body and musical instruments | 1 |
| Conceptual dimension of metaphoric construction | 3 |
| Force and agency | 4 |
| "Body and force" and "body versus force" | 6 |
| The discursive space and disciplinary identity of music psychology | 6 |
| Metaphors as shorthand for music psychology | 8 |
| Roadmap | 10 |
| Historicizing music psychology | 11 |
| 1 The musicking body-machine | 13 |
| Music, machine, and the body | 13 |
| The emergence of the "human motor" model | 15 |
| Rhythm: "an inevitable corollary from the persistence of forces" | 16 |
| Psychological studies in the era of rhythm | 18 |
| Musical rhythm and labor | 20 |
| Rhythm in the "body culture" | 23 |
| The "irrational," continuous rhythm | 24 |
| Rhythm and the piano-playing body | 25 |
| Concluding remarks | 27 |

| | | |
|----------|---|-----------|
| 2 | “A force of nature”: tracing voice | 32 |
| | Animal, machine, and voice | 32 |
| | Speech theory of music | 34 |
| | Voice, the body machine, and the issue of agency | 37 |
| | Voice as both object and subject | 38 |
| | Voice of the “primitive” soul | 40 |
| | Recorded voice | 42 |
| | “Dragging movement” | 43 |
| | “How the voice looks” | 46 |
| | Concluding remarks | 51 |
| 3 | Motion, force, and “rhythm form” | 55 |
| | The “‘co-working of motion’ with one’s own will” | 55 |
| | Piano theories | 56 |
| | Motion in piano playing | 58 |
| | Force and the will | 62 |
| | The will, physiology, and piano-playing | 63 |
| | Force and postures | 66 |
| | Action–perception coupling at the turn of the twentieth century | 69 |
| | “Rhythmic massing” | 72 |
| | Concluding remarks | 75 |
| 4 | Minding gaps and musical energy | 78 |
| | The ball analogy | 78 |
| | The human motor capable of locomotion | 79 |
| | Capturing the musicking body | 82 |
| | Music as streams of energy | 84 |
| | Gliding between tones | 86 |
| | The agency of motion | 91 |
| | Revisiting the ball analogy | 92 |
| | Music as motion across disciplines and times | 93 |
| | Concluding remarks | 94 |
| 5 | Musical force acting at a distance | 98 |
| | Force acting at a distance | 98 |
| | In the words of amateur pianists and psychologists | 100 |
| | Psychological effect of piano playing, the nerve system, and force | 103 |

Force affecting the audience 105
The metaphor of vibratory waves in psychology 107
Sympathetic vibration in musical communication 108
Force at a distance and the power of sound 110
"Brain waves" in communication 112
Inhibition and waves in music psychology 113
The vibratory energy of music 115
"Sympathetic oscillation" 119
Concluding remarks 119

Epilogue 124

Bibliography 127

Index 152