This article examines R&D agreements under EU law, focusing on the revised 2023 Research and Development Block Exemption Regulation (R&D BER). The article examines how the R&D BER streamlines processes, enhances legal clarity, whilst aiming to make the R&D BER clearer and easier to apply, whilst supporting the EU's Green Deal objectives and fostering innovation in sustainable technologies.

From Oligopolies to Algorithms: The Future of Information Exchange Between Competitors in EU Competition Law 144

This article considers how EU enforcement on information exchange expanded, as new communications technologies emerged, from addressing coordination in stable oligopolies to tackling opportunistic coordination in fast-moving financial markets. It assesses the Horizontal Guidelines' new guidance on shared databases and pricing algorithms, looking ahead to how AI may challenge a legal framework that traditionally relies on real world evidence of competitor contacts.

Horizontal Guidelines and Network Sharing Agreements 152

This article deals with the competitive assessment of Network Sharing Agreements (NSAs) between Mobile Network Operators as set out under the revised EU Horizontal Guidelines. It discusses the different factors relevant to their assessment, specifies which NSAs are likely not to restrict competition, addresses the topic of information exchange in the context of NSAs and the role of commitments.

The New Horizontal Sustainability Agreements Chapter: Signalling over Changing 161

This article examines whether the European Commission's new Horizontal Guidelines on sustainability agreements under Article 101 TFEU deliver substantive change or merely clarification. It concludes that while the sustainability chapter enhances legal certainty and signals the feasibility of cooperation, it largely restates existing principles, leaves key issues unresolved, and falls short of a transformative shift.

The New HBERs and Horizontal Guidelines Viewed From the Perspective of the United States, Switzerland, and Turkey 171

The article analyses the revised EU Horizontal Block Exemption Regulations and Horizontal Guidelines through comparative perspectives from the United States, Switzerland, and Turkey. It examines procedural coordination, substantive divergences, and implications for multinational firms, sustainability collaborations, and information exchange. The study highlights regulatory convergence pressures, legal uncertainty, and the EU's emerging role as a reference point for horizontal cooperation governance.
